President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

yes, please tell them that I had referred it to OLC for a draft (OLC helps with these kinds of things), and we should have it tomorrow.
sorry about the delay.

Subject: LETTER

Brett,

SORRY TO BOTHER YOU WITH THIS...

The Office of Homeland Security has been asking me about the language they need for letters to Members on why staff can not testify before Congress.
I think that I talked to you about it last week.

Do you have any language that you can send me?

Thanks.
Nicole

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

President Promotes Economic Security & Worker Assistance

TODAY'S PRESIDENTIAL ACTION

- President Bush visits Operation Paycheck – a job training center in Orlando, Florida – to emphasize his concern and his plans to help workers who lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks. The President also leads a town hall meeting with local citizens from a community adversely impacted by the September 11 attacks to discuss economic concerns and America's efforts in the war on terrorism.

- The attacks of September 11 were also an attack on our economy. President Bush continues to urge Congress to act on an economic security package to help America's workers.

BACKGROUND ON THE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

- The President visits the newest Operation Paycheck One-Stop Center in Orlando. Operation Paycheck is a program of the State of Florida's Agency for Workforce Innovation that helps laid-off workers obtain the skills they need to quickly transition into a new job. A significant number of the workers in the Operation Paycheck program are from the service sector, including the tourism and aviation industries.

- The One-Stop Center is an example of how an effective state-federal partnership can quickly get assistance to the displaced workers who need it. Florida is implementing the Operation Paycheck program with $10 million in existing dislocated worker funds from the Department of Labor. The program will further benefit from a portion of the $3.4 million in new National Emergency Grant funds that the Department of Labor approved for Florida this week. With these funds, qualifying employees are eligible for income support and job training.

THE PRESIDENT'S AGENDA FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY & WORKER RELIEF

- President Bush has urged Congress to act on an economic security package to jumpstart the economy and directly help workers who have lost their jobs in the wake of the September 11 attacks.

- The President proposed a Back to Work Relief Package on October 4 to provide help to those workers hardest hit by the economic impact of the attacks. This package would:

  - Extend unemployment benefits by 13 weeks for workers in the states hardest hit by the events of September 11;
  - Provide $3 billion in special National Emergency Grants to help displaced workers maintain health coverage, supplement their income and receive job training;
  - Make $11 billion available to states to help low-income workers obtain health insurance; and
  - Encourage affected workers to take advantage of more than $6 billion in existing federal job search, training and placement programs.

- The President initially urged Congress on October 5 to enact an economic security package that focuses on:

  - Accelerating Marginal Tax Rate Reductions: Gives consumers more to spend and invest, and gives businesses and entrepreneurs more resources to help them retain or create more jobs.
  - Partial Expensing: Encourages businesses to invest in new equipment and resources by allowing them to partially expense capital expenditures, allowing them to make purchases they might not otherwise have been able to afford.
  - Eliminating the Corporate AMT: Promotes new investment by businesses by eliminating the corporate alternative minimum tax, which imposes job-killing higher taxes on corporations and small businesses.

- Tax Relief for Low- and Moderate-Income Workers: Reduces taxes for low- and moderate-income households beyond relief already approved by Congress, ensuring that the most vulnerable workers will have more money in their pockets.

SUBJECT: VETERANS AFFAIRS Report on Legislation to Authorize Payment of Dependency and Indemnity Compensation (DIC) to the Surviving Spouses and Children of Certain Veterans With a Service-Connected Disability That was Continuously Rated Totally Disabling For a Period of One or More Years Immediately Preceding Death

DEADLINE: Noon Wednesday, December 12, 2001

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This report discusses legislation from the 106th Congress, H.R. 5435, Veterans' Families Protection Act, which would authorize the payment of dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) to the surviving spouses and children of certain veterans with a service-connected disability that was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding death. Rep. Chris Smith asked VA for their views on the legislation since he plans to introduce the proposal again this year. VA states in the report that they do not support the legislation.

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs
House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am pleased to provide the Committee with the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 5435, 106th Cong., the "Veterans' Families Protection Act of 2000," a bill "[t]o amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of dependency and indemnity compensation to the surviving spouses and children of certain veterans with a service-connected disability that was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding death." You indicate that you plan to reintroduce this proposal this year. VA does not support enactment of such legislation.

Current section 1318 of title 38, United States Code, authorizes the payment of dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC) to the surviving spouse or children of a veteran who died from a nonservice-connected cause and who was in receipt of or entitled to receive compensation at the time of death for a service-connected disability rated totally disabling if: (1) the disability was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of 10 or more years immediately preceding death; (2) the disability was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of not less than five years from the date of the veteran's separation from active duty; or (3) the veteran was a former prisoner of war who died after September 30, 1999, and the disability was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of not less than one year immediately preceding death.

In the "Veterans' Disability Compensation and Survivors' Benefits Act of 1978," Pub. L. No. 95-479, § 204, 92 Stat. 1560, 1564, Congress authorized payment of DIC to the surviving spouse or children of a veteran who died from a nonservice-connected cause if the veteran was continuously rated totally disabled due to a service-connected disability for at least 10 years immediately prior to death, or was continuously rated totally disabled due to a service-connected disability for at least 5 years from the date of separation from active service. The legislative history of that Act indicates that Congress sought to recognize the survivors' financial dependence on disability compensation received by a veteran totally disabled for a lengthy period prior to death. S. Rep. No. 95-1054, at 28 (1978), reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3465, 3486 (citing the example of a veteran totally disabled from service-connected causes for 33 years prior to death). Congress also felt that the veteran's total disability, endured over a lengthy period of time, would necessarily result in a substantial impairment of the veteran's ability to provide for his or her survivors and that the primary purpose of the new benefit was to compensate for that impairment. S. Rep. No. 95-1054, at 30, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. at 3488. In the "Veterans Millennium Health Care and Benefits Act," Pub. L. No. 106-117, § 501, 113 Stat. 1545, 1573 (1999), Congress amended section 1318 to authorize the payment of DIC to survivors of former prisoners of war who died from nonservice-connected causes after September 30, 1999, and who were continuously rated totally disabled due to a service-connected disability for at least one year immediately prior to death.

The contemplated legislation would amend 38 U.S.C. § 1318 to offer the same DIC eligibility criterion provided for the survivors of former prisoners of war to the survivors of all totally disabled veterans. In so doing, the legislation may diminish the significance of the special provision established to recognize the sacrifices of former prisoners of war. In addition, expanding the group of survivors eligible for DIC as contemplated may lessen our acknowledgment of the sacrifices of those veterans who died in service or due to service-connected disabilities.

Moreover, the contemplated legislation would not further Congress' objectives in enacting what is now 38 U.S.C. § 1318 of recognizing: (1) the financial dependence of a totally disabled veteran's survivors on disability compensation received by the veteran over many years; and (2) the impairment in the totally disabled veteran's ability to provide for his or her survivors due to his or her disability. A surviving spouse may be expected to be less dependent on a veteran's disability income when little more than one year has elapsed between an initial rating of total disability and the veteran's death. Further, the impact on the veteran's ability to provide for his or her survivors would be less in such a case.

The costs associated with the enactment of the contemplated legislation would be $9.4 million in benefits for Fiscal Year (FY) 2002, $257 million in benefits for the five-year period from FY 2002 through FY 2006, and $1.1 billion in benefits for the ten-year period from FY 2002 through FY 2011.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

H. R. 5435

To amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of d ependency and indemnity compensation to the surviving spouses and children of c ertain veterans with a service-connected disability that was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding deat h.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

October 10, 2000

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey (for himself and Mr. SAXTON) introduced the followin g bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of d ependency and indemnity compensation to the surviving spouses and children of c ertain veterans with a service-connected disability that was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding deat h.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Un ited States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Veterans' Families Protection Act of 200 0'.

SEC. 2. DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION FOR SURVIVING SPOUSES AND CHILDREN OF CERTAIN VETERANS WITH A SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITY THAT WAS CONTI NUOUSLY RATED TOTALLY DISABLING FOR A PERIOD OF ONE OR MORE YEARS IMMEDIATELY P RECEDING DEATH.

Subsection (b) of section 1318 of title 38, United States Code, is ame nded by striking `rated totally disabling if--' and all that follows through th e end of the subsection and inserting `that was continuously rated totally disa bling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding death.'.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

Enclosed is a copy of H.R. 5435, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of dependency and indemnity compensation to the surviving spouses and children of certain veterans with a service-connected disability that was continuously rated totally disabling for a period of one or more years immediately preceding death. Although this bill is from the previous Congress, I do plan to reintroduce it this year.

It would be appreciated if the Committee could receive the views of the Department on the bill, including an estimate of the cost by September 10, 2001.

Sincerely,

Chris Smith

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

I. INTRODUCTION

The Secretary of Veterans Affairs is required to submit to the Senate and House Veterans' Affairs Committees an annual report on the results, status, and priorities of research activities related to the health consequences of military service in the Gulf War. The Research Working Group (RWG) of the Military and Veterans Health Coordinating Board (MVHCB) prepared this document, the 2000 Annual Report to Congress, which is the seventh report on research and research activities. (PGVCB, 1995a; 1996a; 1997; 1998; 1999a; 2001)

This Annual Report is divided into six sections. Section I is an introduction. Section II highlights and summarizes research progress since the last Annual Report. Section III is an analysis of the Federal Government's portfolio of research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. Section IV highlights significant new research projects and initiatives since the last Annual Report. Section V discusses the management of Federal Gulf War veterans' illnesses research programs, including research oversight, peer review, and coordination. Section VI discusses priorities established in 1995, 1996, and 1998 for future research, and highlights the progress made to date.

II. RESEARCH RESULTS IN 2000

In the past year, several research studies have yielded results that provide new and expanded information on the health problems of Gulf War veterans. Section II provides brief summaries of research projects for which results were published from January 2000 to January 2001. The RWG tracks all Federally funded research projects related to Gulf War veterans' illnesses. As in previous reports to Congress, the research reports summarized in Section II are grouped according to nine focus areas: symptoms and general health status, brain and nervous system function, diagnosis, reproductive health, mortality, depleted uranium, chemical weapons, pyridostigmine bromide, and interactions of exposures.

1. Symptoms and General Health Status:

Nine large studies were published that focused on symptoms and general health. (Kang, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Knoke, et al, 2000; Bell, et al, 2000; Nisenbaum, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 2000; Hotopf, et al, 2000; Steele, 2000; Smith, et al, 2000) These publications included the results of studies conducted at four large research centers in Washington, DC, Iowa, San Diego, and London, UK. Each of the nine studies included several hundred to thousands of individuals. Four of the studies have included some form of medical evaluation, such as causes of hospitalization. (Knoke, et al, 2000; Bell, et al, 2000; Nisenbaum, et al, 2000; Smith, et al, 2000) Six of these studies were population-based, which means that the results of these studies may have implications for the overall population of 697,000 Gulf War veterans. (Kang, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Bell, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 2000; Hotopf, et al, 2000; Smith, et al, 2000)

One of the most significant conclusions based on these recent studies and others is that Gulf War veterans do not suffer from a unique, previously unrecognized "syndrome." Four large studies have evaluated the health of thousands of Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans, involving the US Air Force; US Navy; US Army, Navy, and Air Force, combined; and all three services from the United Kingdom, combined. (Fukuda, et al, 1998; Knoke, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 1999) In each study, the patterns of symptoms reported by Gulf War veterans were similar to the patterns of symptoms reported by non-deployed veterans.

2. Brain and Nervous System Function:

Seven studies were published that focused on brain and nervous system function, including posttraumatic stress disorder, major depression, and neuropsychological functioning. (Storzbach, et al, 2000; Storzbach, et al, 2001; King, et al, 2000; Sharkansky, et al, 2000; Benotsch, et al, 2000; Fiedler, et al, 2000; Engel, et al, 2000) These publications presented the results of studies conducted at five federally funded research centers in Portland, Oregon, Boston, New Orleans, East Orange, New Jersey, and Washington, DC. Six of these studies included several hundred to several thousand individuals. Four of these publications relied upon neurological and/or psychiatric evaluations, rather than relying solely on self-administered surveys. (Storzbach, et al, 2000; Storzbach, et al, 2001; Fiedler, et al, 2000; Engel, et al, 2000)

Two of these seven studies, which focused on brain and nervous system function, were published by the Portland Environmental Hazards Research Center. 241 Gulf War veterans who reported unexplained symptoms, which could not be diagnosed after a thorough evaluation, were compared with 113 healthy Gulf War veterans (controls). (Storzbach, et al, 2000) 87% of the 241 cases had unexplained cognitive or psychological symptoms, 38% had unexplained musculoskeletal symptoms, and 42% had unexplained fatigue. There were 12 psychological tests and 6 neurobehavioral tests. Cases differed significantly from controls on all psychological test scales, in the direction of increased distress. Case performance on all neurobehavioral tests was deficient compared to the controls. However, the deficiencies were statistically significant in only 2 of the 6 tests. The performance of about 90% of the cases on the neurobehavioral tests was similar to the controls. (Storzbach, et al, 2001) In contrast, about 10% of the cases performed significantly worse than the controls on almost all the neurobehavioral tests.

3. Diagnosis:

Two studies were published that focused on the diagnosis of infectious diseases in Gulf War veterans, including one study on Mycoplasma fermentans, and one study on infectious diseases that are endemic to the Persian Gulf region. (Lo, et al, 2000; Specht, et al, 2000) The prevalence of antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans was compared among chronically ill Gulf War veterans (cases) and healthy Gulf War veterans (controls), based on specimens obtained before and after the war. (Lo, et al, 2000) Some scientists and veterans have proposed that previously undetected infections with this organism might be a cause of symptoms in some Gulf War veterans. Before the war, 34 out of 718 cases (4.8%) and 116 out of 2,233 controls (5.2%) tested positive for antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans. After the war, an additional 1.1% of cases and 1.2% of controls tested positive for antibodies. These results provided no evidence that infection with this organism was associated with the development of chronic illnesses in the cases.

4. Reproductive Health:

Two studies were published that focused on reproductive health among Gulf War veterans. These included one study on the prevalence of major congenital abnormalities among infants of veterans in Hawaii, and one study on the rates of abnormalities in cervical cytology among women veterans. (Araneta, et al, 2000; Frommelt, et al, 2000) Between 1989 and 1993, 17,182 infants were born to military parents in Hawaii, including 22% Gulf War veterans and 78% non-deployed veterans. (Araneta, et al, 2000) There were no differences in infants born to the two groups of veterans in the rates of low birth weight or prematurity. 367 infants were identified with one or more of 48 major birth defects (2% of live births). The prevalence of birth defects was similar for infants born to the two veteran groups, in the prewar and postwar periods.

5. Mortality:

One study was published that focused on mortality of Gulf War veterans in the United Kingdom. (Macfarlane, et al, 2000) The rates of mortality in all 53,462 British Gulf War veterans were compared with the rates among the same number of non-deployed British veterans. There were 395 deaths among Gulf War veterans (0.7%) and 378 deaths among non-deployed veterans (0.7%). Mortality rates due to diseases (natural causes) were slightly lower among Gulf War veterans. Mortality rates due to external causes were slightly higher among Gulf war veterans, mostly due to motor vehicle accidents. These British results are very similar to results of a mortality study in US Gulf war veterans. (Kang and Bullman, 1996) Both the UK and US mortality studies will continue indefinitely.

6. Depleted Uranium:

One study was published that focused on the effects of depleted uranium (DU) in Gulf War veterans. (McDiarmid, et al, 2001) VA and DoD initiated a national effort in August 1998 to offer a DU medical evaluation to any concerned Gulf War veteran. This study described the results of the first 169 veterans who volunteered for this program through December 1999. Of the 169 veterans who submitted 24-hour samples for determination of urinary uranium concentration, there were only 3 individuals with validated, elevated results. One of these individuals probably had retained DU metal fragments from a friendly fire incident. The sources of the elevated results in the other 2 persons were unknown. The authors concluded "Those with normal uranium values now are unlikely to develop any uranium-related toxicity in the future regardless of what their DU exposure may have been during the Gulf War."

7. Chemical Weapons:

Three studies were published that focused on the effects of chemical weapons in laboratory animals. These studies focused on sarin, and included one study in guinea pigs and two studies in rats. (Spruit, et al, 2000; Khan, et al, 2000; Jones, et al, 2000)

8. Pyridostigmine Bromide:

One study was published that focused on the effects of pyridostigmine bromide in rats. (Li, et al, 2000)

9. Interactions of Exposures:

Nine animal studies were published that focused on the health effects of interactions of exposures. These included five animal studies of the effects of pyridostigmine bromide (PB), in combination with stressors (forced swimming stress, heat stress, severe cold stress, restraint stress, or exercise training). (Grauer, et al, 2000; Sinton, et al, 2000; Servatius, et al, 2000; Somani, et al, 2000; Verma-Ahuja, et al, 2000) Four animal studies evaluated the effects of PB, in combination with other chemicals, in particular, DEET or permethrin. (Hoy, et al, 2000a; Hoy, et al, 2000b; van Haaren, et al, 2000; Chaney, et al, 2000)

III. RESEARCH FUNDING TRENDS

The Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses research portfolio currently includes 193 projects. It was last updated during the second quarter of Fiscal Year 2001 (through March 31, 2001). These 193 Federal research projects are sponsored by the Departments of Veterans Affairs (VA), Defense (DoD), or Health and Human Services (HHS). The scope of the Federal research portfolio is broad, from small pilot studies to large-scale epidemiology studies involving large populations and major research center programs. Currently, the Federal Government is projecting cumulative expenditures of $173.6 million for research from FY 1994 through FY 2001. As of March 31, 2001, 116 projects were completed and 77 projects were ongoing. The overall emphasis of research has been greatest in the focus areas of Symptoms and General Health Status, and Brain and Nervous System Function. The numbers of projects in each focus area are examined in more detail in Section III.

IV. NEW RESEARCH PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

Besides new research findings appearing in the published scientific literature, there have been several important events since last year's Annual Report to Congress that deserve discussion. These include the awarding of new research projects and the development of new research initiatives. This section also updates important accomplishments in 2000 for key research projects and initiatives.

IV.A. NEW RESEARCH PROJECTS

IV.A.1. New Projects Funded by the 2000 DoD Broad Agency Announcements

In 1998, DoD established new funding for programmed research. The purpose of this program element funding is to address Gulf War veterans' illnesses issues, which may also be of concern in future deployments. This planned funding is approximately $20 million per year for FY 1999 through FY 2002 and $5 million per year thereafter. DoD published four Broad Agency Announcements (BAAs) in 2000. The new projects funded by these BAAs will be announced in 2001. The specific requests focused on the following areas of research interest:

- Epidemiological Investigations of Deployment Health Monitoring Methods
- Deployment Stress Health and Performance Consequences
- Biochemical and Physiological Markers to Assess Toxic Chemical Exposures and Health Effects in Deployed Military Personnel
- Toxicity of Militarily Relevant Heavy Metals

IV.B. 2000 UPDATE OF KEY RESEARCH PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

IV.B.1. Institute of Medicine Study of Health Effects Associated with the Gulf War

In 1998, the VA contracted with the Institute of Medicine (IOM) to perform a review of the scientific and medical literature regarding adverse health effects associated with the exposures experienced during the Gulf War. The first phase of this study focused on the medical literature on pyridostigmine bromide, depleted uranium, sarin and cyclosarin, and the anthrax and botulinum toxoid vaccines. A report on this first phase was published in September 2000, entitled Gulf War and Health: Volume 1. Depleted Uranium, Sarin, Pyridostigmine Bromide, Vaccines. (IOM, 2000) The findings and research recommendations in this IOM report are summarized in Section IV.B.1. In 2000, planning started for the second phase of the IOM project, which will focus on a review of the scientific literature on pesticides and solvents used during the Gulf War.

IV.B.2. White House Report: Health Consequences of the Gulf War: An Ongoing Analysis

In mid-2000, White House staff requested that an interagency report be coordinated and edited by the MVHCB, which would summarize the activities of the Federal Government to address illnesses in Gulf War veterans. This report was completed in December 2000, and was entitled Health Consequences of the Gulf War: An Ongoing Analysis. (White House, 2000) This report provides an overview of the clinical programs, research and investigations, compensation initiatives, outreach efforts, and lessons learned. The report includes a chapter on Research, which summarizes the findings to date. The major research conclusions are provided in Section IV.B.2.

IV.B.3. Conference on Federally Sponsored Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses Research

The RWG organized and hosted an international meeting, entitled "2001 Conference on Illnesses among Gulf War Veterans: A Decade of Scientific Research," on January 24-26, 2001, in Alexandria, Virginia. The purpose of the meeting was to bring together Federally sponsored researchers on Gulf War veterans' illnesses in a common forum. This was the fifth such conference, and almost 400 scientists, clinicians, government officials, and veterans attended it. The Proceedings for this conference were published in early 2001. (MVHCB, 2001b)

V. RESEARCH MANAGEMENT

The RWG has accomplished several notable achievements, including:

- Development, production, and dissemination of the 1995 A Working Plan for Research on Persian Gulf Veterans' Illness (PGVCB, 1995b), and its 1996 revision (PGVCB, 1996b).
- Production and dissemination of Annual Reports to Congress for 1994 through 2000 on results, status, and priorities of Federal research activities (PGVCB, 1995a; 1996a; 1997; 1998a; 1999a; 2001; MVHCB, 2001a).
- Secondary programmatic review and recommendations on research proposals that have been competitively reviewed by funding agencies.
- Organization of five conferences of Federally funded researchers, including publication of three Proceedings (PGVCB, 1998b; PGVCB, 1999b; MVHCB, 2001b).
- Coordination and oversight of implementation of relevant recommendations of the Institute of Medicine, Presidential Advisory Committee, Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, the Presidential Review Directive 5, and the Presidential Special Oversight Board (IOM, 1995, 1996; PAC, 1996a, 1996b, 1997; SVAC, 1998; NSTC, 1998; PSOB, 2000).

- Two national treatment trials (exercise/behavior therapy trial and antibiotic treatment trial).

VI. RESEARCH PRIORITIES

The RWG has identified three sets of research priorities in 1995, 1996, and 1998 (PGVCB, 1995b; PGVCB, 1996b; PGVCB, 1999a). Substantial progress has been made on each of these sets of priorities, which is detailed in Section VI.

I. INTRODUCTION

On August 31, 1993, in response to Section 707 of Public Law 102-585, President William J. Clinton named the Secretary of Veterans Affairs (VA) to coordinate research activities undertaken or funded by the Executive Branch of the Federal Government into the health consequences of service in the Gulf War. Section 104 of Public Law 105-368 (1998) expanded the range of activities to be coordinated. VA carries out its research-coordinating role through the Research Working Group (RWG) of the Military and Veterans Health Coordinating Board (MVHCB). The Secretaries of the Department of Defense (DoD), Health and Human Services (HHS), and VA chair the MVHCB.

As part of its coordination role, VA is required to submit an annual report on the results, status, and priorities of research activities to the Senate and House Veterans' Affairs Committees. This document, the 2000 Annual Report to Congress, is the seventh report on research and research activities. (PGVCB, 1995a; 1996a; 1997; 1998; 1999a; 2001) The 2000 Annual Report to Congress reports on research funded by Federal and non-federal institutions. All new peer reviewed reports of high quality research add to and build upon existing knowledge, regardless of funding source.

This Annual Report is divided into six Sections. Following this introductory Section, Section II highlights and summarizes research progress since the last Annual Report. Section III is an analysis of the Federal Government's portfolio of research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. Section IV highlights significant new research projects and initiatives since the last Annual Report. Section V discusses the management of Federal Gulf War veterans' illnesses research programs, including research oversight, peer review, and coordination. Section VI discusses priorities established in 1995, 1996, and 1998 for future research, and highlights the progress made to date.

II. RESEARCH RESULTS IN 2000

New Research Publications

In the past year, several research studies have yielded results that provide new and expanded information on the health problems of Gulf War veterans. This Section provides brief summaries of research projects for which results were published from January 2000 to January 2001. Because all scientifically peer reviewed research must be considered in any future assessments of Gulf War veterans' illnesses, these summaries include both Federally funded and non-federally funded research. The primary source of information on research is from the peer reviewed scientific literature. The RWG tracks all Federally funded research projects related to Gulf War veterans' illnesses. These projects are described in detail in Appendix A.

It is important to note that all research studies have strengths and limitations. Among the limitations, epidemiological studies are frequently subject to a variety of biases. For example, studies that rely on self-reported symptoms and exposures are subject to recall bias, and studies that rely on self-selected cohorts (such as registry participants) are subject to selection bias. Biases can distort the magnitude of differences between cohorts and affect the strength of associations between exposures and outcomes. Other factors potentially affecting epidemiological outcomes include sample size and response rate.

Research using animal models is also subject to limitations in its applicability to a specific situation for humans. Sources of limitations include extrapolation of biological processes from one animal species to another and extrapolation of experimental dosing regimens (route of administration, amount, and duration) from animal experiments to real human exposure situations.

The presence of limitations in a particular study does not necessarily invalidate its findings or conclusions, but must be taken into account in evaluating a study's overall weight and impact. For this reason, the strengths and limitations of each of the new reports of study findings are cited as a guide for the reader.

As in previous reports to Congress, research has been categorized according to particular focus areas. The research reports summarized below are grouped according to nine focus areas: symptoms and general health status, brain and nervous system function, diagnosis, reproductive health, mortality, depleted uranium, chemical weapons, pyridostigmine bromide, and interactions of exposures. In each category, an overview section highlights the results of relevant reports, followed by a summary of each individual report.

A. Symptoms and General Health Status

Overview:

Nine large studies were published in 2000 that focused on symptoms and general health. These publications included the results of studies conducted at four large research centers in Washington, DC, Iowa, San Diego, and London, UK. Each of the nine studies included several hundred to thousands of individuals. Four of the studies have included some form of medical evaluation, such as causes of hospitalization. (Knoke, et al, 2000; Bell, et al, 2000; Nisenbaum, et al, 2000; Smith, et al, 2000) Six of these studies were population-based, which means that the results of these studies may have implications for the overall population of 697,000 Gulf War veterans. (Kang, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Bell, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 2000; Hotopf, et al, 2000; Smith, et al, 2000)

In almost all published studies, Gulf War veterans have reported significantly higher frequencies of symptoms and medical conditions, in comparison with non-deployed veterans. In contrast, the rates of objectively validated medical conditions among Gulf War veterans have generally been similar to the rates in non-deployed veterans. These patterns have been demonstrated again in the VA National Survey and in a survey of veterans in Kansas (Kang, et al, 2000; Steele, 2000)

In 1995, VA initiated a population-based, mailed survey, entitled the "National Health Survey of Gulf War Era Veterans and Their Families." (Kang, et al, 2000) A total of 11,441 Gulf War veterans responded (75%), and 9,476 non-deployed veterans responded (64%). Gulf War veterans reported many chronic medical conditions significantly more frequently than the controls, such as recurrent headaches, frequent diarrhea, and arthritis. In addition, Gulf War veterans reported an increased frequency of all 48 of the 48 symptoms on the survey, compared to the controls. 7.8% of Gulf War veterans reported having been hospitalized overnight during the past year, compared with 6.4% of non-deployed veterans. However, there were no reported differences in the rates of several serious conditions, such as cancer, coronary heart disease, stroke, diabetes, or cirrhosis of the liver. These results were consistent with other large population-based studies of Gulf War veterans in Iowa, Canada, and the United Kingdom. (Iowa, 1997; Goss Gilroy, 1998; Unwin, et al, 1999)

The state of Kansas conducted a statewide survey in 1998 to describe the prevalence and risk factors for health problems in 1,548 Gulf War veterans and 482 non-deployed veterans (65% participation rate). (Steele, 2000) This study included only veterans who had retired or separated by 1998 or who were current Reserve/National Guard members. There were 55% Reserve/National Guard in the Kansas sample, compared to 17% of all Gulf War veterans. Gulf War veterans reported significantly higher rates of 10 of 21 medical conditions that were diagnosed or treated by a physician, such as depression, arthritis, migraine headache, or posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD). Gulf War veterans reported significantly higher rates of all 37 of 37 symptoms. Notably, there were no reported differences in the rates of hospitalizations (1991 to 1998) or rates of application for VA disability benefits (1991 to 1998). The prevalence of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) working case definition of multisymptom illness was also evaluated. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) This CDC case definition was reported by 47% of Gulf War veterans in Kansas and 20% of non-deployed veterans. Overall, the Kansas data indicated that Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans reported similar patterns of symptoms, although Gulf War veterans reported higher rates.

Four major studies have been published that used a statistical technique, factor analysis, to identify patterns of symptoms. The health of thousands of Gulf War veterans has been evaluated in these four studies, involving the US Air Force; the US Navy; the US Army, Navy, and Air Force combined; and all three armed services in the United Kingdom, combined. (Fukuda, et al, 1998; Knoke, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 1999) In each of these studies, the patterns of symptoms reported by Gulf War veterans were similar to the patterns reported by non-deployed veterans. The results of these four studies are consistent with the conclusion of a recent Institute of Medicine report, which was, "Thus far, there is insufficient evidence to classify veterans' symptoms as a new syndrome. . . All Gulf War veterans do not experience the same array of symptoms. Thus, the nature of the symptoms suffered by many Gulf War veterans does not point to an obvious diagnosis, etiology, or standard treatment." (Institute of Medicine, 2000)

Differences in demographic variables, health behaviors, risk-taking behaviors, and mental or physical health could influence a soldier's postwar health status. Such factors could also influence the chance of selection for deployment. 675,626 active duty Army soldiers were followed from 1980 to the beginning of the Gulf War. (Bell, et al, 2000) About 38% of these soldiers were deployed to the Gulf War. In comparison to non-deployed soldiers, Gulf War veterans were more likely to have the following characteristics: male, fewer than 5 years of time in service, younger than 25 years of age, black, single, high school education, fewer dependents, and junior enlisted rank. Deployed soldiers were more likely to be in certain military occupational specialties: infantry/gun crews, mechanical repair, or crafts workers (e.g., plumbers, metal workers). Deployed soldiers were more likely to have received hazardous duty pay before July 1990; and deployed soldiers received this hazardous duty pay more frequently for parachuting or for potential exposure to hostile fire before July 1990. Rates of hospitalizations for all injuries in military hospitals were evaluated from 1980 to August 1, 1990. The risk of hospitalization for injuries was higher among the deployed soldiers in most years. In addition, male gender, young age, less education, single marital status, less time in service, and receipt of two or more types of hazardous duty pay during one pay period were all significant predictors of prewar hospitalization for injuries. The authors concluded that "postwar excess injury risk may be explained in part by a propensity for greater risk-taking, which was evident before and persisted throughout the war."

Several studies have demonstrated a significant association between demographic, lifestyle, and occupational risk factors and increased symptoms among Gulf War veterans. For example, in the VA National Survey, Gulf War veterans who were in the Army or in the Reserve/National Guard consistently reported higher rates of symptoms and medical conditions, than veterans in other services or on active-duty. (Kang, et al, 2000) In the Kansas study, there was a significant association between increasing symptoms in multiple organ systems in Gulf War veterans, and female gender, lower household incomes, lower education, enlisted status, and service in the Army. (Steele, 2000) The CDC evaluated the association between several risk factors and a working case definition of chronic multisymptom illness in 1,002 Air Force veterans of the Gulf War. (Fukuda, et al, 1998; Nisenbaum, et al, 2000) The multisymptom illness was significantly associated with increasing age, female gender, non-white race, current smoking, and enlisted rank.

In 1997-98, a mailed survey was conducted among a randomly selected sample of 3,297 British servicemen, who had deployed to the Gulf War (70% response rate). (Unwin, et al, 1999; Ismail, et al, 2000) The authors used two physical health status measures and two mental health status measures. Physical ill health was measured as fatigue, and as a measure of multisymptom illness, based on the CDC working case definition. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) Psychological ill health was measured as psychological distress, and as a measure of post-traumatic stress reaction. There was a significant relationship between decreasing military rank and all four health outcomes. Privates were about two to three times more likely to report ill health than officers were. At the time of the survey, 57% of the Gulf War veterans had left the armed forces. Veterans who had been discharged were about two times more likely to report all four health outcomes. There was a highly significant linear trend between smoking and all four health outcomes.

Some studies have shown a significant association between reported environmental exposures and increased symptoms among Gulf War veterans, while other studies have shown no association. In the CDC study of multisymptom illness, 6% and 39% of Gulf War veterans fulfilled the case definition of severe illness and mild-to-moderate illness, respectively. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) The rates of severe and mild-to-moderate illness were significantly associated with self-reports of pyridostigmine bromide (PB) use; insect repellent use on a regular basis; and the belief that chemical or biological weapons were used against them. (Nisenbaum, et al, 2000) Severe illness was also associated with injuries during the war that required medical attention. The authors cautioned, however, that these self-reports of exposures could be subject to recall bias. In particular, the reports could be strongly influenced by extensive media coverage or by psychological states, such as PTSD, which were not controlled in the analysis.

In the British study of Gulf War veterans, it was hypothesized that Royal Army personnel might have been in closer geographical proximity to some of the environmental exposures implicated during the war, than Royal Navy or Royal Air Force personnel. (Ismail, et al, 2000) Nonetheless, Army personnel reported the same levels of health problems as Navy and Air Force personnel. In addition, combat troops, such as the infantry, reported the same levels of health problems as support troops, such as engineering or medical personnel. One possible explanation of this finding is that the ground war only lasted four days, whereas chemical and biological weapons were considered to be a real threat for several months and beyond the immediate geographical frontline.

A second analysis of the British Gulf War cohort focused on the relationship between ill health after the Gulf War and vaccines received before or during the conflict. (Hotopf, et al, 2000) This study used data only from veterans who reported that they still had their vaccine records (n=923; 28% of responders). The patterns of vaccines given before and during deployment were different, with more "routine" vaccines and fewer biological warfare vaccines given before deployment. The associations of vaccines with six health outcomes were evaluated. Multiple vaccines (defined as 5 or more vaccines) received before deployments were associated with only one of the six health outcomes (post-traumatic stress reaction). In contrast, five of the six outcomes were associated with multiple vaccines received during deployment (all but post-traumatic stress reaction). The strongest association was with the CDC case definition of multisymptom illness. The authors concluded that multiple vaccines, combined with the "stress" of deployment, might be associated with ill health. This study has raised a number of methodological concerns, in particular, that the restricted sample of 923 veterans who kept their vaccine records might be biased in some way. (Shaheen, 2000; Bolton, et al, 2001)

The rates of three diseases were compared among Gulf War and non-deployed veterans, due to concern among some veterans: systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE), amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS; also called Lou Gehrig's disease), and fibromyalgia (FM). (Smith, et al, 2000) This included 551,841 service members who were deployed to the Gulf War and 1,478,704 service members who were not deployed. All military hospitalization data were evaluated for the three specific diseases during the follow-up period of August 1, 1991 to July 31, 1997 (six years). There were 36 Gulf War veterans and 160 non-deployed veterans who were diagnosed with SLE (relative risk of 0.94; not significant). There were 6 Gulf War veterans and 12 non-deployed veterans who were diagnosed with ALS (relative risk of 1.66; not significant). It is noteworthy that in 2000, the VA and DoD initiated an evaluation of the rates of ALS in Gulf War and non-deployed veterans, which will include data from VA, DoD, and civilian sources. There were 239 Gulf War veterans and 621 non-deployed veterans who were diagnosed with FM (relative risk of 1.23; significantly increased). Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program (CCEP) participation was a strong independent risk factor for FM. In particular, CCEP participants had 26.4 times the risk of being hospitalized for FM compared with non-participants.

Symptoms and General Health Status-Individual Studies:

1. Kang, HK, Mahan, CM, Lee, KY, Magee, CA, and Murphy, FM. Illnesses among United States veterans of the Gulf War: a population-based survey of 30,000 veterans. Journal of Occupational and Environmental Medicine 2000; 42(5):491-501. (VA-2)

In 1995, VA initiated a population-based, mailed survey, entitled the "National Health Survey of Gulf War Era Veterans and Their Families." (Kang, et al, 2000) The purpose of the survey was to compare the health status of a sample of 15,000 Gulf War veterans with the health status of a sample of 15,000 non-deployed veterans. Women and members of the Reserve and National Guard were over-sampled. In 1995 to 1996, 15,817 veterans responded to the mailed survey. In 1996 to 1998, an additional 5,100 responded to a supplemental telephone survey. A total of 11,441 Gulf War veterans responded (75%), and 9,476 non-deployed veterans responded (64%) (overall response rate of 70%).

The questionnaire included various symptoms, medical diagnoses, measures of functional impairment, and potential environmental exposures. Gulf War veterans reported many chronic medical conditions significantly more frequently than the controls, such as recurrent headaches, frequent diarrhea, and arthritis. However, there were no reported differences in the rates of several serious conditions, such as cancer, coronary heart disease, stroke, diabetes, or cirrhosis of the liver. In addition, Gulf War veterans reported an increased frequency of all 48 of the 48 symptoms on the survey, compared to the controls. Members of the Reserve or National Guard consistently reported higher rates of symptoms and medical conditions, than active-duty members did. Army veterans reported higher rates than veterans of the other services did.

50.8% of Gulf War veterans reported that they had visited a clinic or seen a physician during the past year, compared to 40.5% of non-deployed veterans. 7.8% of Gulf War veterans reported having been hospitalized overnight during the past year, compared with 6.4% of non-deployed veterans. Medical records were retrieved for a small proportion of veterans (784 records of clinic visits and 105 records of hospitalizations). To the extent that records were available, the self-reported reasons for clinic visits (e.g., headaches, rash) and reasons for hospitalizations (e.g., appendicitis) correlated well with the reasons documented in the written records.

Overall, the results of this survey indicate that the self-reported health of Gulf War veterans is not as good as the self-reported health of non-deployed veterans, as measured by functional impairment, health care utilization, symptoms, and medical conditions. These results are consistent with other large population-based studies of Gulf War veterans in Iowa, Canada, and the United Kingdom. (Iowa, 1997; Goss Gilroy, 1998; Unwin, et al, 1999) The final stage of this national VA survey includes a medical evaluation of 1,000 Gulf War veterans and their families and 1,000 non-deployed veterans and their families, which will be completed in 2001.

2. Doebbeling, BN, Clarke, WR, Watson, D, Torner, JC, Woolson, RF, Voelker, MD, Barrett, DH, and Schwartz, DA. Is there a Persian Gulf War syndrome? Evidence from a large population-based survey of veterans and nondeployed controls. American Journal of Medicine 2000; 108(9):695-704. (HHS-1)
In 1995-96, a randomly selected sample of Iowa military personnel was surveyed using a telephone interview. (Iowa, 1997) A total of 1,896 Gulf War veterans and 1,799 non-deployed veterans participated (76% response rate). The Gulf War veterans came from 889 different units that had been widely distributed during the war, which reflected a broad range of geographic and environmental exposures. The objective of this study was to look for evidence of a novel illness that was unique to Gulf War veterans, and that was not seen in a comparable military population. (Doebbeling, et al, 2000) Gulf War veterans reported significantly higher rates of 123 of 137 (90%) symptoms during the past year, compared to the controls. These symptoms were related to all organ systems. The authors concluded that the increased prevalence of nearly every symptom among Gulf War veterans is "difficult to explain pathophysiologically as a single condition."

A statistical technique, factor analysis, was used to identify patterns of symptoms. This technique was used separately with the symptoms of the Gulf War veterans and with the symptoms of the controls, to determine if the patterns were unique. Factor analysis identified three patterns of symptoms that correlated with each other, among the Gulf War veterans. The three patterns included: 1) joint stiffness, myalgia, polyarthralgia, numbness or tingling, headaches, and nausea; 2) feeling nervous, worrying, feeling distant or cut-off, depression, and anhedonia; and 3) anxiety attacks, a racing, pounding or skipping heart, attacks of chest pain or pressure, and attacks of sweating.

However, these three patterns were highly replicable in the controls, that is, the patterns were almost identical (convergent correlations of 0.95 to 0.98). The authors concluded that the identification of the same patterns of symptoms among both groups is "not consistent with the existence of a unique Gulf War syndrome;" and the results should "help alleviate concern about an unexplained 'mystery illness.' "

3. Knoke, JD, Smith, TC, Gray, GC, Kaiser, KS, and Hawksworth, AW. Factor analysis of self-reported symptoms: does it identify a Gulf War syndrome? American Journal of Epidemiology 2000; 152(4):379-388. (DoD-1A)

In 1994-95, an evaluation was performed of 98 symptoms reported by 524 Gulf War veterans and 935 non-deployed veterans, who were members of 14 Seabee commands, and who had remained on active-duty from 1991 until the time of the study. (Gray, et al, 1999a) A questionnaire assessed postwar symptoms and environmental exposures during the war, and it screened for chronic fatigue syndrome, post-traumatic stress disorder, and psychological symptoms (Hopkins Symptom Checklist). The objective of this study was to investigate the usefulness of a statistical technique, factor analysis, in characterizing a Gulf War syndrome. (Knoke, et al, 2000)

Factor analysis applied to the symptoms of Gulf War veterans yielded five patterns of symptoms. These were three patterns of psychological symptoms that derived from the Hopkins Symptom Checklist, one pattern that suggested clinical depression, and one pattern that contained various physical symptoms that are often reported by Gulf War veterans. Factor analysis applied to non-deployed veterans yielded the same five patterns of symptoms. However, Gulf War veterans reported these patterns of symptoms with greater frequencies than the non-deployed veterans did. The authors concluded that "the symptoms and illnesses of Gulf War veterans closely reflect the symptoms and illnesses reported by non-deployed veterans; Gulf War veterans simply report more of the same symptoms and illnesses." The authors concluded that factor analysis did not identify a unique Gulf War syndrome.

Some of the earliest Gulf War veterans who reported postwar morbidity were members of a Navy Reserve unit, the Naval Mobile Construction Battalion 24 (24th Seabees). In 1994, 249 members of this unit participated in a survey (41% response). Factor analysis was used to evaluate the symptoms, which yielded six patterns of symptoms. The authors of this study interpreted these six patterns to be "unique Gulf War syndromes." (Haley, et al, 1997a) A major strength of the active-duty Seabee population included in the 2000 study is that they had served in the same tasks (construction work) and at the same sites as the symptomatic Reserve members in the 24th Seabees. (Gray, et al, 1999a; Knoke, et al, 2000) Four of the five symptom patterns in the 2000 study, found in both Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans, resembled four of the six symptom patterns in the 1997 Haley study. The authors of the 2000 study stated that the conclusion of the 1997 Haley study regarding unique syndromes "was premature and would not have been reached had a corresponding analysis on an appropriate control group been performed."

Four major studies have been published that used factor analysis to identify patterns of symptoms. The health of thousands of Gulf War veterans has been evaluated in these four studies, involving the US Air Force; the US Navy; the US Army, Navy, and Air Force combined, and all three armed services in the United Kingdom, combined. (Fukuda, et al, 1998; Knoke, et al, 2000; Doebbeling, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 1999) In each of these studies, the patterns of symptoms reported by Gulf War veterans were similar to the patterns reported by non-deployed veterans. The results of these four studies are consistent with the conclusion of a recent Institute of Medicine report, which was, "Thus far, there is insufficient evidence to classify veterans' symptoms as a new syndrome. . . All Gulf War veterans do not experience the same array of symptoms. Thus, the nature of the symptoms suffered by many Gulf War veterans does not point to an obvious diagnosis, etiology, or standard treatment." (Institute of Medicine, 2000)

The objective of this study was to describe the prewar demographic, occupational and physical health status of active duty Army soldiers who deployed to the Persian Gulf and to compare these with the same characteristics of soldiers on active duty who did not deploy. (Bell, et al, 2000) Differences in demographic variables, health behaviors, risk-taking behaviors, and mental or physical health could influence a soldier's postwar health status. Such factors could also influence the chance of selection for deployment. This study expands on previous studies, by examining a broader range of prewar health status measures for all Army soldiers on active duty during the war, followed over a longer prewar period. A total of 675,626 active duty Army soldiers were followed from 1980, or upon entry into the Army if they joined after 1980, to the beginning of the Gulf War. About 38% of these soldiers were deployed to the Gulf War between August 1, 1990 and June 14, 1991.

The Total Army Injury and Health Outcomes Database were used to describe the study population's demographic, health, and behavioral characteristics. In comparison to soldiers who did not deploy, Gulf War veterans were more likely to have the following characteristics: male, fewer than 5 years of time in service, younger than 25 years of age, black, single, high school education, fewer dependents, and junior enlisted rank. Deployed soldiers were more likely to be in certain military occupational specialties: infantry/gun crews, mechanical repair, or crafts workers (e.g., plumbers, metal workers). Deployed soldiers were more likely to have received hazardous duty pay before July 1990. Compared to non-deployed soldiers, deployed soldiers received this hazardous duty pay more frequently for parachuting or for potential exposure to hostile fire before July 1990.

Rates of hospitalizations in military hospitals were evaluated from 1980 to August 1, 1990, for all causes and all injuries. After adjustment for demographic and occupational factors, deployed soldiers were at slightly, but significantly, decreased risk of hospitalization for all causes, particularly in the three years before the war. This implies that the prewar health status of deployed soldiers was as good as or better than the prewar health status of non-deployed veterans. For most years between 1980 and 1990, the risk of hospitalization for injuries was higher among the deployed soldiers, even after control of potential confounders. This could imply a greater frequency of risk-taking behavior. In addition, male gender, young age, less education, single marital status, less time in service, and receipt of two or more types of hazardous duty pay during one pay period were all significant predictors of prewar hospitalization for injuries. The authors concluded that "postwar excess injury risk may be explained in part by a propensity for greater risk-taking, which was evident before and persisted throughout the war."

The Centers for Disease and Control Prevention performed a survey of four Air Force units in 1995 to compare symptoms and risk factors among 1,155 Gulf War veterans and 2,520 non-deployed veterans. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) A working case definition of a chronic multisymptom illness was developed, which included 1 or more chronic symptoms from at least 2 of 3 categories (fatigue, mood and cognition symptoms, and musculoskeletal symptoms). The prevalence of mild-to-moderate cases and severe cases among Gulf War veterans was 39% and 6%, respectively, compared with 14% and 0.7% among non-deployed veterans. The objective of this analysis was to determine the association between the chronic multisymptom illness and self-reported stressors during the war, among 1,002 Gulf War veterans with complete data. (Nisenbaum, et al, 2000)

Increasing age, female gender, non-white race, current smoking, and enlisted rank were significantly associated with illness. Severe illness and mild-to-moderate illness were significantly associated with self-reports of pyridostigmine bromide (PB) use; insect repellent use on a regular basis; and the belief that chemical or biological weapons (CBW) were used against them. The authors categorized these risk factors as chemical stressors (PB and insect repellent) and emotional stressors (belief in use of CBW). Severe illness was also associated with injuries during the war that required medical attention. The authors categorized injuries as physical stressors.

The authors suggested that these chemical, emotional, and physical stressors might have triggered physiological and psychological stress responses, thereby impacting the health of some veterans. They cautioned, however, that the self-reports of exposures could be subject to recall bias. In particular, the reports could be strongly influenced by extensive media coverage or by psychological states, such as PTSD, which were not controlled in the analysis.

In 1997-98, a mailed survey was conducted among a randomly selected sample of 3,297 British servicemen, who had deployed to the Gulf War (70% response rate). (Unwin, et al, 1999) The objective of this particular analysis was to examine whether certain military and deployment factors were associated with increased reporting of ill health in Gulf War veterans, after adjustment for potential sociodemographic confounders. (Ismail, et al, 2000) Because there is no general consensus on the definition of ill health in Gulf War veterans, the authors used two physical health status measures and two mental health status measures. Physical ill health was measured as fatigue, using the Chalder Fatigue Questionnaire, and as a multisymptom illness, based on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention working case definition. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) Psychological ill health was measured as psychological distress, using the General Health Questionnaire-12, and as a measure of post-traumatic stress reaction.

There was a significant relationship between decreasing military rank and all four health outcomes. Privates were about two to three times more likely to report ill health than officers were. Rank may be considered as a proxy indicator for socioeconomic status, which is associated with both physical and psychological morbidity in civilian populations. At the time of the survey, 57% of the Gulf War veterans had left the armed forces. Veterans who had been discharged were about two times more likely to report all four health outcomes. Gulf War veterans who were divorced or separated were about two times more likely than married veterans to report psychological distress or post-traumatic stress reaction, which is similar to associations seen in civilian populations. There was a highly significant linear trend between smoking and all four health outcomes.

The authors hypothesized that Royal Army personnel might have been in closer geographical proximity to some of the environmental exposures implicated during the war, than Royal Navy or Royal Air Force personnel. Nonetheless, Army personnel reported the same levels of health problems as Navy and Air Force personnel. Combat troops, such as the infantry, reported the same levels of health problems as support troops, such as engineering or medical personnel. One possible explanation is that the ground war only lasted four days, whereas chemical and biological weapons were a real threat for several months and beyond the immediate geographical frontline.

7. Hotopf, M, David, A, Hull, L, Ismail, K, Unwin, C, and Wessely, S. Role of vaccinations as risk factors for ill health in veterans of the Gulf War: cross-sectional study. British Medical Journal 2000: 320(7246):1363-1367. (DoD-39)

In 1997-98, a mailed survey was conducted among a randomly selected sample of 3,284 British servicemen, who had deployed to the Gulf War (70% response rate). (Unwin, et al, 1999) The objective of this particular analysis was to explore the relationship between ill health after the Gulf War and vaccines received before or during the conflict. (Hotopf, et al, 2000) Because recall bias can be a problem, this study only used data from veterans who reported that they still had their vaccine records (n=923; 28% of responders). The associations of vaccinations with six health outcomes were evaluated. These were: fatigue, using the Chalder Fatigue Questionnaire: multisymptom illness, based on the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention working case definition (Fukuda, et al, 1998); psychological distress, using the General Health Questionnaire-12; a measure of post-traumatic stress reaction; health perception, using the SF-36; and physical functioning, using the SF-36.

Multiple vaccines (defined as 5 or more vaccines) received before deployments were associated with only one of the six health outcomes (post-traumatic stress reaction). In contrast, five of the six outcomes were associated with multiple vaccines received during deployment (all but post-traumatic stress reaction). The strongest association was with the CDC multisymptom illness (odds ratio of 5.0). In addition, the associations were evaluated between multiple vaccinations and three atopic conditions (asthma, hay fever, and eczema or psoriasis). There were no significant associations between vaccines, before or during deployment, and these atopic conditions. Anthrax vaccination was not associated with the CDC multisymptom illness, whether given before or during deployment.

The pattern of vaccines given before deployment was different from the pattern given during deployment, with more "routine" vaccines and fewer biological warfare vaccines given before deployment. In addition, there were probably reasons why some veterans received vaccines during the war rather than before it, including, veterans who received vaccines during deployment tended to have been deployed earlier; and Army personnel were more likely to receive multiple vaccines during deployment than Navy or Air Force personnel. The authors concluded that multiple vaccines in themselves do not seem to be harmful, in that the combination of multiple vaccines before deployment seemed safe. However, multiple vaccines, combined with the "stress" of deployment, might be associated with ill health. The authors recommended that "every effort should be made to maintain routine vaccinations during peacetime;" or at least, "early vaccination with as long a gap as possible before the actual stress of deployment would be prudent."

This study has raised a number of methodological concerns, in particular, that the restricted sample of 923 veterans who kept their vaccine records might be biased in some way. (Shaheen, 2000; Bolton, et al, 2001) For example, symptomatic veterans who kept their vaccine records might have discerned the study hypothesis, and therefore over-reported the vaccines they received. The authors are continuing their investigation, using a case-control design comparing healthy and ill Gulf War veterans, and relying on Ministry of Defence medical records to validate vaccine use. (Hotopf, et al, 2001)

8. Steele, L. Prevalence and patterns of Gulf War illness in Kansas veterans: association of symptoms with characteristics of person, place, and time of military service. American Journal of Epidemiology 2000; 152(10):992-1002. (Not Federally funded; funded by state of Kansas)

The objective of this study was to describe the prevalence and risk factors for health problems in 1,548 Gulf War veterans, in comparison with 482 non-deployed veterans. (Steele, 2000) Telephone interviews were conducted in 1998, achieving a 65% participation rate. Veterans currently living in Kansas in 1998 were eligible if they had served on active-duty some time between August 1990 and July 1991; and if they were separated or retired from the military or currently serving in the Reserve. Note that this sampling design lead to a skewed sample that contained 55% Reserve/National Guard, which is more than three times the proportion that served during the war (17% Reserve/National Guard). In other studies, Reserve/National Guard troops have invariably reported more symptoms than active-duty troops. (Iowa, 1997; Sharkansky, et al, 2000; Kang, et al, 2000)

47% of Gulf War veterans stated their health was worse in 1998 than in 1990, compared to 19% of non-deployed veterans. Gulf War veterans reported significantly higher rates of 10 of 21 medical conditions that were diagnosed or treated by a physician, such as depression, arthritis, migraine headache, or PTSD. Gulf War veterans reported significantly higher rates of all 37 of 37 symptoms. Notably, there were no reported differences in the rates of hospitalizations (1991 to 1998) or rates of application for VA disability benefits (1991 to 1998).

The author proposed a Kansas case definition of "Gulf War Illness" as the report of chronic symptoms in 3 or more of 6 domains (fatigue/sleep problems; pain symptoms; neurologic/cognitive/mood symptoms; gastrointestinal symptoms; respiratory symptoms; skin symptoms). This Kansas case definition was reported by 34% of Gulf War veterans and 8% of non-deployed veterans. The prevalence of this Kansas case definition was significantly associated with female gender, lower household incomes, lower education, enlisted status, and service in the Army. The prevalence of the CDC working case definition of multisymptom illness was also evaluated. (Fukuda, et al, 1998) This CDC case definition was reported by 47% of Gulf War veterans and 20% of non-deployed veterans. These data clearly indicate that Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans reported similar patterns of symptoms, although Gulf War veterans reported higher rates.

This study has substantial limitations, in particular, all the health data and most of the military data were self-reported. The author pointed out that "The considerable amount of media attention given to issues surrounding Gulf War-related health problems may have generated an increased awareness of symptoms among Gulf War veterans and an increased willingness to report them." For example, 70 of the 482 veterans, whose military records did not document that they had deployed, provided a history of Gulf War service. The self-reported deployment information of 50 of these veterans could not be verified, and their data was excluded in the analysis.

9. Smith, TC, Gray, GC, and Knoke, JD. Is systemic lupus erythematosus, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, or fibromyalgia associated with Persian Gulf War service? An examination of Department of Defense hospitalization data. American Journal of Epidemiology 2000; 151(11):1053-1059. (DoD-1B)

The objective of this study was to examine the association of Gulf War service with three diseases: systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE), amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS; also called Lou Gehrig's disease), and fibromyalgia (FM). All regular, active-duty personnel were included, who were on active duty during the period of August 8, 1990 to July 31, 1991. This included 551,841 service members who were deployed to the Gulf War and 1,478,704 service members who were not deployed. All military hospitalization data were evaluated for the three specific diseases, during the six-year follow-up period of August 1, 1991 to July 31, 1997.

During the six-year follow-up period, 36 Gulf War veterans and 160 non-deployed veterans were diagnosed with SLE. Gulf War service was not associated with a diagnosis of SLE (relative risk = 0.94). Other factors were significantly associated with a diagnosis of SLE: female sex (relative risk = 12.12); black race (relative risk = 3.61); and increasing age (relative risk = 1.04).

During the six-year follow-up period, 6 Gulf War veterans and 12 non-deployed veterans were diagnosed with ALS. Gulf War service was not associated with a diagnosis of ALS (relative risk = 1.66). One factor that was significantly associated with a diagnosis of ALS was increasing age. It is noteworthy that in 2000, the VA and DoD initiated an evaluation of the rates of ALS in Gulf War and non-deployed veterans, which will include data from VA, DoD, and civilian sources.

During the six-year follow-up period, 239 Gulf War veterans and 621 non-deployed veterans were diagnosed with FM. Gulf War service was significantly associated with a diagnosis of FM (relative risk = 1.23). Other factors were also significantly associated with a diagnosis of FM: female sex (relative risk = 3.28); increasing age (relative risk = 1.05); and hospitalization for any diagnosis other than FM, during the 12 months prior to the war (relative risk =1.63). Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program (CCEP) participation was a strong independent risk factor for FM. In particular, CCEP participants had 26.4 times the risk of being hospitalized for FM, compared with non-participants. It is important to note that symptoms of FM are being evaluated in three large Gulf War populations. These include questionnaires and physical examinations in the VA National Survey, Iowa study, and Portland study.

B. Brain and Nervous System Function

Overview:

Seven studies were published that focused on brain and nervous system function. These publications presented the results of studies conducted at five Federally funded research centers in Portland, Oregon, Boston, New Orleans, East Orange, New Jersey, and Washington, DC. Six of these studies included several hundred to several thousand individuals. Four of these publications relied upon neurological and/or psychiatric evaluations, rather than relying solely on self-administered surveys. (Storzbach, et al, 2000; Storzbach, et al, 2001; Fiedler, et al, 2000; Engel, et al, 2000)

The Portland Environmental Hazards Research Center performed a population-based case-control study of 2,022 Gulf War veterans. In this analysis, 241 Gulf War veterans who reported unexplained symptoms, which could not be diagnosed after a thorough evaluation, were compared with 113 healthy Gulf War veterans (controls). (Storzbach, et al, 2000) 87% of the cases had unexplained cognitive or psychological symptoms, 38% had unexplained musculoskeletal symptoms, and 42% had unexplained fatigue. There were 12 psychological tests and 6 neurobehavioral tests. Cases differed significantly from controls on all psychological test scales, in the direction of increased distress. There were significant differences on tests of posttraumatic stress disorder, psychiatric symptoms, and personality measures. Almost all psychological measures had effect sizes that were large. Case performance on all neurobehavioral tests was deficient compared to the controls. However, the deficiencies were statistically significant in only 2 of the 6 tests. All neurobehavioral tests had effect sizes that were small. The results of the neurobehavioral tests did not support a distribution-wide deficit in ill veterans. (Storzbach, et al, 2001) The performance of about 90% of the cases was similar to the controls. In contrast, about 10% of the cases performed significantly worse than the controls on almost all the neurobehavioral tests.

Ill Gulf War veterans consistently reported more combat stressors than healthy Gulf War veterans, such as deaths of unit members. This has been demonstrated in several different groups of ill veterans. These have included veterans with posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) (King et al, 2000; Benotsch, et al, 2000; Engel, et al, 2000); veterans with chronic fatigue syndrome (Fiedler, et al, 2000); and veterans with unexplained symptoms that could not be diagnosed after a thorough evaluation (Storzbach, et al, 2000).

In two large longitudinal studies in Boston and New Orleans, Gulf War veterans were evaluated soon after returning from the war, and again 1 to 2 years later. (King, et al, 2000; Benotsch, et al, 2000) In both cohorts, the number of reported PTSD symptoms increased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2, rather than ameliorating over time. In the Boston cohort, the number of reported depression symptoms increased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2. (King, et al, 2001) Also, in the Boston cohort, the number of reported combat stressors increased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2.

Three studies evaluated the relationship between psychological symptoms and different types of strategies for coping with combat-related stress. (Sharkansky, et al, 2000; Benotsch, et al, 2000; Fiedler, et al 2000) In other studies, efforts to deal directly with the stressor (problem-focused or approach-based coping) tended to be associated with better outcomes, compared to attempts to alleviate the emotional distress associated with the stressor or efforts to avoid the stressor (emotion-focused or avoidance-based coping).

A subgroup of 1,058 members of the Boston cohort were selected at Time 1 because they had identified a combat-related experience as their most stressful event during the Gulf War (e.g., deaths of unit members). (Sharkansky, et al, 2000) At Time 1, increased PTSD symptoms were predicted by the number of combat-related stressors, female gender, younger age, Reserve/National Guard status, enlisted status and by proportionately greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war. At Time 2, PTSD symptoms were predicted by PTSD symptoms at Time 1, combat exposure, Reserve/National Guard status, and intervening stressors (such as divorce or loss of a home due to a disaster, between Time 1 and Time 2). At Time 1, depression symptoms were predicted by combat exposure, female gender, and greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war. At Time 2, depression symptoms were predicted by combat exposure, intervening stressors, and greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war.

In the New Orleans cohort, problem solving as a positive coping strategy decreased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2, while the disadvantageous strategy of avoidance-based coping increased significantly over time. (Benotsch, et al, 2000) Both avoidance-based coping at Time 1 and decreased family cohesion at Time 1 significantly predicted PTSD symptoms at Time 2. These relationships between coping, family cohesion, and PTSD remained significant, after controlling for emotional distress at Time 1, reported number of war zone stressors, and enlisted status.

The New Jersey Environmental Hazards Research Center performed a study to compare several risk factors among 58 Gulf War veterans, who met clinical criteria for chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS), with 45 healthy Gulf War veterans. (Fiedler, et al, 2000) Veterans with CFS reported significantly more negative life events during the 6 months following the war. Veterans with CFS reported more avoidance-based coping strategies. The authors concluded that Gulf War veterans with medically unexplained fatigue could be significantly differentiated from healthy veterans, on the basis of stressors both during and since the war (e.g., combat stressors, negative life events); personality traits (e.g., neuroticism, the tendency to experience negative, distressing emotions); and avoidance-based coping strategies.

The relationship of the diagnosis of PTSD to physical symptoms was evaluated, after controlling for the possible effects of medical diagnoses and reported environmental exposures. (Engel, et al, 2000) Symptoms and diagnoses were based on the medical records of 21,232 participants in the DoD Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program. Physical symptoms were determined using a 16-item checklist. Veterans diagnosed with PTSD were more likely to report each of the 16 physical symptoms. 5.2% of veterans were diagnosed with PTSD, who reported a mean of 6.7 physical symptoms. 31.4% of veterans were diagnosed with other psychological conditions, who reported a mean of 5.3 physical symptoms. 63.4% of veterans were diagnosed with non-psychological conditions, who reported a mean of 3.1 physical symptoms. The positive association between PTSD and the number of physical symptoms remained almost unchanged, even after controlling for the potentially confounding effects of other psychological diagnoses, medical diagnoses, and reported environmental exposures. The authors recommended that "Clinicians should carefully consider PTSD when evaluating Gulf War veterans with vague, multiple, or medically-unexplained physical symptoms."

Brain and Nervous System Function-Individual Studies:

1. Storzbach, D, Campbell, KA, Binder, LM, McCauley, L, Anger, WK, Rohlman, DS, and Kovera, CA. Psychological differences between veterans with and without Gulf War unexplained symptoms. Psychosomatic Medicine 2000; 62(5):726-735. (VA-6)

The Portland Environmental Hazards Research Center performed a population-based case-control study, which was designed to compare Gulf War veterans, who reported unexplained symptoms that could not be diagnosed, with healthy Gulf War veterans (controls). (McCauley, et al, 1999) Cases and controls were selected from respondents to a questionnaire, which was mailed to a random sample of 2,022 Gulf War veterans who lived in Oregon or Washington. Questions focused on chronic fatigue, psychological/cognitive symptoms, and musculoskeletal symptoms. Potential cases of unexplained illnesses and healthy controls were recruited for clinical evaluations within 3 months of returning the mail questionnaire. The evaluations included a physical exam with an emphasis on neurological and musculoskeletal systems, a detailed health history, and psychological and neurobehavioral tests. Potential cases were excluded from the study if they had explainable diagnoses, or exclusionary diagnoses, or if they denied having case symptoms at the time of clinical evaluation.

The objective of this particular analysis was to compare measures of psychological and neurobehavioral functioning between 241 Gulf War veterans with unexplained symptoms and 113 healthy Gulf War veterans. (Storzbach, et al, 2000) 87% of the cases had unexplained cognitive or psychological symptoms, 38% had unexplained musculoskeletal symptoms, and 42% had unexplained fatigue. 48% had 2 or more symptom types. There were 12 psychological tests and 6 neurobehavioral tests, which provided objective measures of memory, concentration, complex cognitive processing, and response speed.

Cases were significantly different from controls on all psychological test scales, in the direction of increased distress. There were significant differences on tests of posttraumatic stress disorder, psychiatric symptoms, and personality measures. Almost all psychological measures had effect sizes that were large. There were also significant differences on all SF-36 scales of self-rated physical health, mental health, and health-related function. Cases reported significantly greater exposure to combat stressors. Case performance on all neurobehavioral tests was deficient compared to the controls. However, the deficiencies were statistically significant in only 2 of the 6 tests (2 tests of memory, attention, and response speed). All neurobehavioral tests had effect sizes that were small.

All statistically significant psychological and neurobehavioral variables were entered as candidate variables into a logistic regression analysis, with case disposition as the dependent variable (case vs. control). Four psychological variables and no neurobehavioral variables entered into the model. The four tests were: the Hs scale of the MMPI-2, a measure of somatic symptoms associated with psychological distress; the Mississippi PTSD scale, a measure of symptoms associated with wartime posttraumatic stress; the SCIS, a measure of subjective experience of cognitive impairment; and the SF-36 General Health, a measure of perceived health. The model successfully classified 86% of the subjects overall (89% of the cases and 80% of the controls). The authors concluded that "The high degree of accurate classification based on psychological tests highlights the relative prominence of the psychological measures, suggesting that they discriminate veterans with health symptoms from those without symptoms and should be retained as part of future batteries used to assess Gulf war veterans."

2. Storzbach, D, Rohlman, DS, Anger, WK, Binder, LM, and Campbell, KA. Neurobehavioral deficits in Persian Gulf veterans: additional evidence from a population-based study. Environmental Research 2001; 85(1):1-13. (VA-6)

The Portland Environmental Hazards Research Center performed a population-based case-control study. (McCauley, et al, 1999; Anger, et al, 1999; Storzbach, et al, 2000) The objective of this particular analysis was to compare measures of psychological and neurobehavioral functioning between 239 Gulf War veterans with unexplained symptoms and 112 healthy Gulf War veterans. (Storzbach, et al, 2001) There were 12 psychological tests and 6 neurobehavioral tests, which provided objective measures of memory, concentration, complex cognitive processing, and response speed.

There was a definite bimodal distribution on one of the neurobehavioral tests, the latency time on the Oregon Dual Task Procedure (ODTP), a test of motivation, attention, and memory. (Storzbach, et al, 2001) Subjects were divided into 30 individuals who were slow on this test ("slow ODTP," including 27 cases and 3 controls), 212 "other cases," and 109 controls. Both subgroups of slow ODTP and other cases had significantly higher levels of abnormal results on the psychological tests than the controls. The performance of the other cases was similar to the controls on the neurobehavioral tests, whereas, the slow ODTP subgroup performed significantly worse than the controls on almost all of the neurobehavioral tests.

On the Armed Forces Qualifying Test, which each recruit must take, there were no differences between the other cases and the controls. In contrast, the subgroup of slow ODTP had significantly lower scores on this test than the controls. This raises the possibility that the neurobehavioral performance of the slow ODTP is attributable to pre-Gulf War ability. In addition, a significantly higher percentage of slow ODTP reported seeking medical treatment during the Gulf War (73%), than the other cases (54%) or the controls (28%). The authors suggested that this difference in seeking medical attention might mean that the slow ODTP group could have been from the "unhealthy end" of the Gulf War population at the time of their deployment.

The authors pointed out that deficits on neurobehavioral tests are not markers of brain dysfunction. Cognitive abnormalities are nonspecific and associated with various conditions, including somatoform disorders and PTSD. The authors concluded that their results did not support a distribution-wide neurobehavioral deficit in ill veterans. If a distribution-wide deficit had been demonstrated, it would have important implications for the understanding of Gulf War veterans with unexplained illnesses. Instead, it appeared that a small proportion of quite symptomatic veterans, who responded very slowly on a recognition memory test, also demonstrated deficits on other tests of response speed, memory and attention.

3. King, DW, King, LA, Erickson, DJ, Huang, MT, Sharkansky, EJ, and Wolfe, J. Posttraumatic stress disorder and retrospectively reported stressor exposure: A longitudinal prediction model. Journal of Abnormal Psychology 2000; 109(4):624-633. (VA-7)

The Boston Environmental Hazards Research Center has been following 2,949 Army veterans who processed through Fort Devens, Massachusetts, at the time of their return from the Gulf War in 1991. (Wolfe, et al 1996) These veterans have been evaluated at four time points, starting within five days of their return to the U.S., and again at 18 to 24 months (Time 2), four years (Time 3), and six years (Time 4). The study population includes about 72% Reserve/National Guard and about 28% active duty, and it includes 84 units with a wide range of military occupational specialties from several regions of the U.S. At Time 2, 2,313 subjects participated, which was 78% of the original cohort.

The objective of this particular analysis was to use longitudinal data to evaluate risk factors for posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) over time. (King, et al, 2000) Comparisons were made at Time 1 and Time 2, focusing on responses on the Mississippi Scale for Combat-Related PTSD, a well-validated survey instrument. The Laufer

Combat Exposure Scale, a validated questionnaire, was used to measure combat stressor exposure. It was supplemented by additional questions intended to represent events unique to the Gulf War, for a total of 31 combat stressors. This analysis examined the association between PTSD and retrospective self-reports of exposure to highly stressful events. In particular, it focused on the question: To what extent does PTSD symptom severity alter later reports of stressor exposure?

Mean scores on both the reported stressor measure and the PTSD scale increased between Time 1 and Time 2. On the reported stressor measure, only 9% of the subjects responded completely consistently at Time 1 and Time 2. The mean number of changes was 3 out of 31 questions. The number of no-to-yes changes was two times the number of yes-to-no changes, which means that persons who initially disavowed a particular exposure later endorsed that event. Some questions changed by as much as 30% over time. This is puzzling, since some of these exposures were serious, dramatic, and distressing events, such as "Did you see Americans or other troops killed or wounded?"

The number of changes in the stressor measure had a significant, although small, association with the severity of PTSD symptoms at both Time 1 and Time 2. One possible explanation is that increased reporting as a function of PTSD symptoms might be related to efforts to explain distress in terms of prior war experiences; veterans experiencing psychological problems might seek justification by increasing their endorsement of possible causal events. However, there was little evidence that the severity of Time 1 PTSD symptoms significantly influenced reporting of stressor exposure at Time 2. Stressor exposures reported at Time 2 were primarily related to stressor exposures reported at Time 1. The authors concluded that "changes in reporting past events over time should not necessarily be a source of undue alarm that Time 1 PTSD symptom severity accounts for those changes."

4. Sharkansky, EJ, King, DW, King, LA, Wolfe, J, Erickson, DJ, and Stokes, LR. Coping with Gulf War combat stress: mediating and moderating effects. Journal of Abnormal Psychology 2000; 109(2):188-197. (VA-7)

The Boston Environmental Hazards Research Center has been performing a prospective study of 2,949 Army veterans since their return from the Gulf War in 1991. (Wolfe, et al, 1996; King, et al, 2000) The objective of this particular analysis was to evaluate the relationship between psychological symptoms at Time 1 and Time 2 and different types of strategies for coping with combat-related stress. (Sharkansky, et al, 2000) The hypothesis was that greater reliance on avoidance-based coping would be associated with worse outcomes (higher levels of symptoms of PTSD and depression). Coping is defined as conscious efforts to manage internal or external stressors that the individual perceives as exceeding existing resources. In previous studies, efforts to deal directly with the stressor (problem-focused or approach-based coping) tended to be associated with better outcomes, compared to attempts to alleviate the emotional distress associated with the stressor or efforts to avoid the stressor (emotion-focused or avoidance-based coping).

1,058 subjects (36% of the total cohort at Time 1) were selected for this analysis. These subjects were selected because they had identified a combat-related experience as their most stressful event during the Gulf War (for example, a SCUD missile attack or deaths of unit members). They were asked to identify which of 48 possible coping strategies they used to deal with the most stressful event. PTSD and depression symptoms were assessed with two validated questionnaires, the Mississippi Scale for Combat-Related PTSD and the Brief Symptom Inventory.

At Time 1, increased PTSD symptoms were predicted by combat exposure (number of combat-related stressors), female gender, younger age, Reserve/National Guard status, and enlisted status. PTSD symptoms at Time 1 were also predicted by proportionately greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war. At Time 2, PTSD symptoms were predicted by PTSD symptoms at Time 1, combat exposure, Reserve/National Guard status, and intervening stressors (such as divorce or loss of a home due to a disaster, between Time 1 and Time 2). PTSD symptoms at Time 2 were not predicted by coping strategies during the war. At Time 1, depression symptoms were predicted by combat exposure, female gender, and proportionately greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war. At Time 2, depression symptoms were predicted by combat exposure, intervening stressors, and proportionately greater reliance on avoidance-based coping strategies during the war.

The authors concluded: "These data suggest that soldiers who actively attempt to cope with combat-related stress by analyzing and making efforts to solve the problem, seeking guidance and support from others, and positively reappraising the situation fared better initially and in the long run than those who coped by avoiding thinking about the situation, getting involved with distracting activities, letting off emotional steam, or resigning themselves to the situation." They stated their data suggested "the potential value of training military personnel in more active methods of coping with war zone stress to aid in the prevention of some combat-related disorders."

The New Orleans Veterans Affairs Medical Center has been following 348 Gulf War veterans since 1991, including 180 members of the Louisiana National Guard and 168 members of the Army, Marine, Air Force, or Navy Reserve. (Sutker, et al, 1995; Brailey, et al, 1998) The initial assessments occurred an average of 14 months after the end of hostilities (Time 1). Follow-up assessments occurred an average of 13 months later (Time 2). The assessments were identical at both time points. The 348 participants available for retesting were from an original sample of 828 (42% response at Time 2). Attrition was due to reservists having left the military, having been transferred to another unit, or being absent from drill exercises on the scheduled retest date. Although there did not appear to be important psychological differences between the participants who were retested and those who were lost to follow-up, the authors acknowledged the high rate of attrition as a limitation.

The objective of this particular analysis was to examine the relationships of resources and PTSD symptoms at two time points, including personal resources (personality hardiness and coping styles), environmental resources (social support and family relationships), emotional distress, and potentially protective demographic variables (age and rank). (Benotsch, et al, 2000) Forty-two percent of participants reported experiencing at least one potentially traumatizing event during the war, such as encountering casualties. Probable diagnoses of PTSD were based on the PTSD Checklist, and psychological distress was assessed with the Brief Symptom Inventory (BSI), in particular, anxiety, depression, and hostility. PTSD symptoms increased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2. 39 veterans (11%) scored high enough for a probable PTSD diagnosis at Time 2. Veterans identified as having PTSD at Time 2 reported significantly greater war zone stress than veterans without PTSD.

The positive personal resources of hardiness, commitment, and control decreased significantly from Time 1 to Time 2. Problem solving as a positive coping strategy decreased significantly over time, while the disadvantageous strategy of avoidance-based coping increased significantly over time. There were no significant decreases in the environmental resources of family or other social support. Both avoidance-based coping and decreased family cohesion at Time 1 significantly predicted PTSD symptoms at Time 2. These relationships remained significant after controlling for emotional distress on the BSI at Time 1, perceived stressfulness of the war zone, and enlisted vs. officer status.

The authors concluded that "Troops returning from a war zone may be faced with the dual challenge of simultaneously accommodating to increasing emotional distress and decreasing personal resources." For example, PTSD symptoms are likely to disrupt social relationships, and the loss of such support limits the subsequent available options to manage new sources of stress, leading, in turn, to increased emotional distress. The authors cautioned that the original directionality of cause and effect between PTSD and resources could not be determined conclusively, because of a lack of pre-war information on coping strategies, social support, and psychopathology.

The New Jersey Environmental Hazards Research Center performed a study of veterans who were enrolled in the VA Persian Gulf Registry. (Kipen, et al, 1999; Lange, et al, 1999) The objective of this study was to compare several risk factors among Gulf War veterans, who met clinical criteria for chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS), with healthy Gulf War veterans. (Fiedler, et al, 2000) Fifty-eight veterans who reported severe fatigue and forty-five healthy veterans were selected from 1,161 veterans who were enrolled in the VA Persian Gulf Registry, and who had participated in a large mailed questionnaire in 1995-1996. This particular analysis evaluated several risk factors, including the occurrence of self-reported war-related and non-war-related stressors, personality variables, and coping styles.

These 103 veterans underwent an intensive medical history, physical exam, and blood tests. To assess Axis I psychiatric disorders according to DSM-III-R criteria, trained personnel administered a computerized standardized diagnostic interview. The 58 CFS cases were divided into two groups: 35 veterans with Axis I psychiatric illnesses within the past 12 months (CFS/psychiatric illness), and 23 veterans with no Axis I illnesses since the war (CFS/no psychiatric illness). The healthy veterans had no Axis I psychiatric illnesses since the war. Both CFS groups reported significantly more combat exposures than the healthy controls.

There were no differences among the three groups for non-war-related negative life events during the 6 months before the war or during the war. Both CFS groups reported significantly more negative life events during the 6 months following the war. Both CFS groups reported more avoidance-based coping strategies, with the CFS/psychiatric illness group reporting the highest levels of these strategies. The CFS/psychiatric illness group reported the most significant levels of negative affective state ("neuroticism," the tendency to experience negative, distressing emotions), as well as having the most difficulty in clearly identifying and communicating this distress accurately (highest level of "alexithymia"). The authors suggested that these personality attributes likely contributed to their difficulty in coping with adverse life events since the war.

The authors concluded that Gulf War veterans with medically unexplained fatigue could be significantly differentiated from healthy veterans on the basis of stressors both during and since the war (e.g., combat stressors, negative life events); personality traits (e.g., neuroticism, alexithymia); and avoidance-based coping strategies. They cautioned, however, that these results were restricted to Gulf War veterans with CFS who were willing to undergo extensive evaluation, and therefore, these results could not be generalized to all Gulf War veterans with unexplained symptoms.

The objective of this study was to test the relationship of the diagnosis of PTSD to physical symptoms, after controlling for the possible effects of medical diagnoses and reported environmental exposures. (Engel, et al, 2000) Symptoms and diagnoses were based on the medical records of 21,232 participants in the DoD Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program. Physical symptoms were determined using a 16-item checklist. The mean number of symptoms was 4.0. 16% of veterans reported no symptoms, while 9% reported 10 or more symptoms. Veterans diagnosed with PTSD were more likely to report each of the 16 physical symptoms. This was even true for symptoms that have no apparent relationship to the neurophysiology of PTSD, such as bleeding gums. The symptoms most frequently reported by patients with PTSD were fatigue, sleep disturbance, joint pain, memory loss, headache, depressed mood, and difficulty concentrating.

5.2% of veterans were diagnosed with PTSD, who reported a mean of 6.7 physical symptoms. 31.4% of veterans were diagnosed with other psychological conditions, who reported a mean of 5.3 physical symptoms. 63.4% of veterans were diagnosed with non-psychological conditions, who reported a mean of 3.1 physical symptoms. 7.6% of the latter group were diagnosed as healthy, who reported a mean of 1.2 physical symptoms. In addition, veterans diagnosed with PTSD reported significantly increased numbers of combat stressors, compared to veterans diagnosed with other psychological conditions or non-psychological conditions.

A second symptom count was also evaluated, after exclusion of 5 symptoms that potentially overlap with symptoms of PTSD and other psychological disorders (depressed mood, difficulty concentrating, memory loss, sleep disturbance, and fatigue). The same order was maintained, with PTSD patients reporting the most symptoms, even after exclusion of the 5 neuropsychiatric symptoms. The authors commented that "The relationship between PTSD and different physical symptoms is remarkably consistent, irrespective of whether a given symptom overlaps with the diagnostic criteria for PTSD."

A model was developed to predict the number of physical symptoms, including PTSD diagnoses, other psychological diagnoses, medical diagnoses, and reported environmental exposures. The positive association between PTSD and the number of physical symptoms remained almost unchanged, even after controlling for the potentially confounding effects of other diagnoses and environmental exposures. The authors cautioned that, because physical symptoms and psychological distress were assessed at the same time, it could not be determined whether distress caused amplified estimates of physical symptom severity or whether physical symptoms caused psychological distress. They recommended that "Clinicians should carefully consider PTSD when evaluating Gulf War veterans with vague, multiple, or medically-unexplained physical symptoms."

C. Diagnosis

Overview:

Two published studies in 2000 focused on the diagnosis of infectious diseases. (Lo, et al 2000; Specht, et al, 2000) The objectives of the first study were to compare the prevalence of antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans among ill and healthy Gulf War veterans, and to determine the rates of seroconversion for this organism, based on specimens obtained before and after the war. (Lo, et al, 2000) The objective of the second study was to identify infectious diseases that are endemic to the Persian Gulf region, through review of pathology specimens obtained from Gulf War veterans. (Specht, et al, 2000)

Diagnosis-Individual Studies:

1. Lo, SC, Levin, L, Ribas, J, Chung, R, Wang, RY, Wear, D, and Shih, JW. Lack of serological evidence for Mycoplasma fermentans infection in army Gulf War veterans: A large-scale case-control study. Epidemiology and Infection 2000; 125(3):609-619. (DoD-47)

The objectives of this study were to compare the prevalence of antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans among ill and healthy Gulf War veterans, and to determine the rates of seroconversion for this organism, based on specimens obtained before and after the war. (Lo, et al, 2000) There has been some speculation that the increased rate of symptom reporting in Gulf War veterans might be due to a previously undetected infectious organism. Some scientists and veterans have proposed occult infection with Mycoplasma fermentans as a possible cause.

The cases were 718 Army Gulf War veterans with chronic illnesses, which were often disabling, who had been evaluated in Phase II of the DoD Comprehensive Clinical Evaluation Program (CCEP). The controls were 2,233 Gulf War veterans who were randomly selected from Army veterans who had not enrolled in the CCEP. Cases were matched on age, gender, length of time deployed to the Gulf War, and length of time between the pre-war and post-war specimen collections. Despite the matching procedure, cases were significantly more likely to be non-white, married, and senior enlisted rank. These demographic differences were not associated with antibody status.

Before the war, 34 out of 718 cases (4.8%) and 116 out of 2,233 controls (5.2%) tested positive for antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans. There were no differences in the rates of seroconversion, which means a negative result on the first antibody test, and a positive result on a later antibody test. 1.1% of cases and 1.2% of controls seroconverted. Based on a large sample size, these results provide no evidence that infection with Mycoplasma fermentans was associated with the development of chronic illnesses in the cases. The authors concluded that such infection is unlikely to play an important role in the disease process of chronic illnesses in Gulf War veterans.

The results of this study of Army Gulf War veterans are quite consistent with the results of a similar study of Navy Gulf War veterans. The Navy study compared the rates of antibodies to Mycoplasma fermentans between Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans. (Gray, et al, 1999b) Antibodies to Mycoplasma were present both before the war and after the war. The prevalence of antibodies was similar in Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans. Also, antibodies to Mycoplasma were not associated with postwar symptoms in either Gulf War veterans or non-deployed veterans.

The surgical pathology and cytopathology of US Persian Gulf War military veterans: Identification of diseases endemic to the theater of operations. Archives of Pathology and Laboratory Medicine 2000; 124(9):1299-1301. (Funded by DoD and VA)

The objective of this study was to identify infectious diseases that are endemic to the Persian Gulf region, through review of pathology specimens obtained from Gulf War veterans. (Specht, et al, 2000) The Kuwait Registry was established at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology to act as a repository for surgical pathology and cytopathology specimens, which were contributed from Veterans Affairs medical centers and military medical treatment facilities. These specimens were collected as part of routine screening or as part of workups for any presenting medical complaints.

Registry diagnoses from 1992 to December 1997 were reviewed to identify infectious diseases endemic to the Persian Gulf region. This long list of infections included leishmaniasis, malaria, hepatitis A, B, and C, anthrax, and several others. Most of these endemic infectious diseases produce acute medical illnesses that do not require biopsy or surgery, or do not leave long-term specific cellular changes. The only endemic diseases that would be detectable in pathology specimens would be associated with an etiologic agent that persists within the patient for a long time or associated with a persistent cellular abnormality.

Specimens were available from 2,852 Gulf War veterans. One patient in the Registry was diagnosed with hepatitis B (prevalence of 0.04%) and 15 patients were diagnosed with hepatitis C (prevalence of 0.58%). The prevalence of these two diseases in the Registry was well below the prevalence in the general US population. It is unknown whether these cases of hepatitis were contracted before, during, or after the war. No other endemic diseases were identified in the Registry specimens. Nearly all of the 32 cases of leishmaniasis among Gulf War veterans were diagnosed before the Registry started in 1992, so the Registry did not identify any of those cases.

D. Reproductive Health

Overview:

Two published studies focused on reproductive health among Gulf War veterans. (Araneta, et al, 2000; Frommelt, et al, 2000) The objective of the first study was to determine the prevalence of major congenital abnormalities among infants of Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans in Hawaii, a state that conducts statewide, population-based surveillance for birth defects. (Araneta, et al, 2000) The objective of the second study was to evaluate the rates of cervical cytology abnormalities among female Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans, using the results of Pap smears. (Frommelt, et al, 2000)

Reproductive Health-Individual Studies:

1. Araneta, MR, Destiche, DA, Schlangen, KM, Merz, RD, Forrester, MB, and Gray, GC. Birth defects prevalence among infants of Persian Gulf War veterans born in Hawaii, 1989-1993. Teratology 2000; 62(4):195-204. (DoD-1G)

The objective of this study was to determine the prevalence of major congenital abnormalities among infants of Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans in Hawaii, a state that conducts statewide, population-based surveillance for birth defects. (Araneta, et al, 2000) The personal identifiers of 684,645 Gulf War veterans (GWV) and 1,587,102 non-deployed veterans (NDV) were matched against birth certificate records of 99,545 live births in Hawaii between 1989 and 1993, to identify births to military personnel. 17,182 infants were identified who were born to military parents (22% GWV and 78% NDV). Notably, 19% of all infants born in Hawaii were born to military parents. GWV infants were less likely to have a mother in the military (5% GWV vs. 17% NDV). GWV infants were much more likely to have parent who served in the Marine Corps (41% GWV vs. 9% NDV). There were no differences in infants born to GWV and NDV in rates of low birth weight or prematurity.

Live births were matched to records in the Hawaii Birth Defects Program. 367 infants were identified with one or more of 48 major birth defects (2% of live births). The prevalence of the 48 birth defects was similar for GWV and NDV in the prewar period (January 1, 1989 to December 31, 1990); and for the postwar period (January 1, 1991 to December 31, 1993). The prevalence of birth defects was similar among GWV before and after the war. For both GWV and NDV, the most common types of birth defects were in the genitourinary system (hypospadias and epispadias). 202 women were GWV who gave birth in 1989 to 1993. 37 of these infants were conceived before the war and 165 of these infants were conceived during or after the war. Of these 165 infants, 6 were born with birth defects.

Only one previous, large study had a similar purpose; that is, to evaluate birth defects among Gulf War veterans. This earlier study had the limitation that it included only births in military hospitals. (Cowan, et al, 1997) The 2000 study has a number of strengths, in particular, the inclusion of births in both military and civilian hospitals. (Araneta, et al, 2000) It included parents who were currently in the Reserve or National Guard, and it included live births to parents who had separated from the military (40% of the GWV and 46% of the NDV, by the end of 1993). It included birth defects diagnosed through the first 12 months of life. The authors are continuing their investigation using the same methods in 5 additional states that perform active case surveillance for birth defects--Arizona, Arkansas, California, Georgia, and Iowa.

2. Frommelt, RA, Peterson, MR, and O'Leary, TJ. A comparison of cervical pathology between United States Air Force women who did and did not serve in the Persian Gulf War. Annals of Epidemiology 2000; 10(5):285-292. (Funded by DoD)

The objective of this study was to evaluate the rates of cervical cytology abnormalities among female Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans, using the results of Pap smears. (Frommelt, et al, 2000) More than 48,000 women deployed to the Gulf War, more than any other war in US history. Concerns about an increased frequency of abnormal Pap smears among women Gulf War veterans had been raised because of a 1995 survey of 525 female Air Force veterans. (Pierce, 1997) In 1995, Gulf War veterans reported a rate of 10.4% abnormal tests vs. 4.9% among non-deployed veterans.

Pap smears were collected as part of routine medical care at 28 military treatment facilities in 20 states and Japan, and forwarded to the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology. Pap smears were evaluated from 6,715 women on active-duty in the Air Force in 1994 (1,446 Gulf War and 5,269 non-deployed). Pap smears were also evaluated from a minority of these same women in 1995 and 1996. For the 3 years of data, there were no differences in the rates of abnormal Pap smears between the two groups of women. In 1994, 11.9% of the Pap smears in the Gulf War veterans were classified as "other than within normal limits," as were 10.9% in the non-deployed veterans (not significant).

The percentage of self-reported abnormal results among Gulf War veterans in the 1997 study was similar to the findings here (10.4% vs. 11.9%). (Pierce, 1997) In contrast, the percentage of self-reported abnormal results among the non-deployed veterans in the 1997 study was about half the findings here (4.9% vs. 10.9%). The authors stated that a possible explanation for the results of the 1997 study is that the non-deployed veterans failed to recall an abnormal Pap smear that did not require additional treatment, rather than a real increase in abnormal Pap smears among Gulf War veterans. The authors concluded that "Overall, the data provide little support for the hypothesis that a difference exists between Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans with respect to abnormal cervical cytology." (Frommelt, et al, 2000)

E. Mortality

Macfarlane, GJ, Thomas, E, and Cherry, N. Mortality among UK Gulf War veterans. Lancet 2000; 356(9223):17-21. (Funded by UK Medical Research Council)

One published study in 2000 focused on mortality in Gulf War veterans. The objective of this study was to document the mortality experience of all 53,462 British Gulf War veterans and a matched comparison group of 53,462 non-deployed veterans in the eight years since the war. (Macfarlane, et al, 2000) The comparison group was matched on age, sex, rank, and service. Individuals were identified on central registers of the UK Office for National Statistics, and information on death among subjects was obtained, including cause of death. Follow-up started on April 1, 1991, and continued to March 31, 1999. Person-years at risk were calculated until the earliest of: date of death, date of permanent emigration from the UK, or March 31, 1999.

Vital status was determined for 97.2% of the Gulf War veterans and 95.7% of non-deployed veterans. The cohorts were 98% male and 72% were 30 years or younger on January 1, 1991. There were 395 deaths among the Gulf War veterans (0.7%) and 378 deaths among the non-deployed veterans (0.7%). Mortality due to disease-related causes was slightly lower in the Gulf War veterans (mortality rate ratio [MRR] = 0.87; 95% C.I., 0.67-1.11). There were 53 cancer deaths among the Gulf War veterans and 48 cancer deaths among the controls. There was no excess of any particular type of cancer.

Mortality due to "external" causes was slightly higher in the Gulf War veterans (MRR = 1.18; 95% C.I., 0.98-1.42). This higher mortality rate due to "external" causes was mainly due to accidents, and there were no differences in the rates of suicide or homicide. The higher mortality rate due to "external" causes in the UK is consistent with the results of a mortality study in US Gulf War veterans. (Kang and Bullman, 1996) Both the UK and US mortality studies will continue indefinitely.

F. Depleted Uranium

McDiarmid, MA, Engelhardt, SM, and Oliver, M. Urinary uranium concentrations in an enlarged Gulf War veteran cohort. Health Physics 2001; 80(3):270-273. (Funded by VA and DoD)

One published study focused on the effects of depleted uranium in Gulf War veterans. (McDiarmid, et al, 2001) In 1993, the Baltimore Veterans Affairs Medical Center began a prospective study of Gulf War veterans who had been wounded in friendly fire incidents, to quantify body burdens of uranium over time and to detect any adverse health effects from this exposure. (Hooper, et al, 1999; McDiarmid, et al, 2000) The VA and DoD were concerned that embedded depleted uranium (DU) fragments could dissolve over time, potentially leading to toxic effects in the kidneys and other organs. Because of concern expressed by many veterans about possible DU exposure, VA and DoD initiated a national effort in August 1998 to offer a DU medical evaluation to any concerned Gulf War veteran, including urinary uranium testing. The objective of this particular study was to describe the results of the first 169 veterans who volunteered for this expanded program in August 1998 to December 1999. (McDiarmid, et al, 2001)

169 veterans submitted 24-hour urine samples for determination of urinary uranium concentration and questionnaires describing their potential exposures to DU during the Gulf War. 44 of these individuals were still on active-duty and 125 had been discharged. DU exposure was determined from 30 questions, such as inspection or repair activities in damaged Abrams tanks or Bradley vehicles with possible DU contamination, or clean-up activities after a fire at Doha, Kuwait, which included possible DU contamination.

The urinary uranium concentrations ranged from 0.001 to 0.432 micrograms uranium per gram creatinine (median of 0.010). The cut point of elevated uranium concentration was selected as 0.050 micrograms uranium per gram creatinine, based on the upper limit of normal in the general population. Twelve individuals exceeded this cut point on the first urine test. Six of these 12 were retested; and 3 were still in the elevated range and 3 were in the low range. Of the 3 individuals with repeat elevated results, one person probably had retained DU metal fragments from a friendly fire incident. The sources of the elevated results in the other 2 persons were unknown. In fact, one of them was not even a Gulf War veteran.

The authors concluded that in 2000, elevated urinary uranium levels were unlikely to be observed, except for those veterans with retained DU metal fragments. This is consistent with their previous results in the medical surveillance of veterans involved in friendly fire incidents. (Hooper, et al, 1999; McDiarmid, et al, 2000) The authors concluded, "There is little likelihood that the possible but transient exposure to DU during the Gulf War will result in significant health issues now or in the future. . . Those with normal uranium values now are unlikely to develop any uranium-related toxicity in the future regardless of what their DU exposure may have been during the Gulf War."

G. Chemical Weapons

Overview:

Three published studies in 2000 focused on the effects of sarin in laboratory animals. (Spruit, et al, 2000; Khan, et al, 2000; Jones, et al, 2000) None of the results of these studies can be directly extrapolated to health effects in humans, because of the high doses used and the routes of exposure (injection, in most of the studies). The first study investigated the toxicokinetics of two stereoisomers of sarin in guinea pigs. (Spruit, et al, 2000) The second study evaluated the short-term effects of sarin on several enzymes and acetylcholine receptors in Sprague-Dawley rats. (Khan, et al, 2000) The third study evaluated the effects on enzymes and permeability of the blood-brain barrier, 90 days after a single dose of sarin in Sprague-Dawley rats. (Jones, et al, 2000)

Chemical Weapons-Individual Studies:

1. Spruit, HE, Langenberg, JP, Trap HC, van der Wiel, HJ, Helmich, RB, van Helden, HP, and Benschop, HP. Intravenous and inhalation toxicokinetics of sarin stereoisomers in atropinized guinea pigs. Toxicology and Applied Pharmacology 2000; 169(3):249-254. (DoD-55)

The objective of this study was to investigate the toxicokinetics of two stereoisomers of sarin (- and +). (Spruit, et al, 2000) The – isomer causes toxic effects, while the + isomer is relatively nontoxic. Anesthetized, atropinized, and restrained guinea pigs were exposed to air concentrations of sarin for 8 minutes, which corresponded to 0.4 and 0.8 of the LCt50 (lethal air concentration in 50% of the animals). To serve as a reference for the respiratory exposures, another set of experiments was performed with an intravenous dose corresponding to 0.8 of the LD50 (lethal intravenous (IV) dose in 50% of the animals). Blood specimens were taken for analysis of sarin level and blood acetylcholinesterase level (AChE). In all experiments, the blood concentrations of the non-toxic isomer of sarin (+) were below the detection limit. In both the IV and respiratory experiments, the toxicokinetics of the toxic isomer of sarin (-) showed a significant non-linearity with dose. During the respiratory experiments, the blood AChE levels decreased rapidly during the exposure period. At a dose of 0.4 and 0.8 of the LCt50, the AChE decreased to about 70% and 15% of control activity, respectively.

2. Khan, WA, Dechkovskaia, AM, Herrick, EA, Jones, KH, and Abou-Donia, MB. Acute sarin exposure causes differential regulation of choline acetyltransferase, acetylcholinesterase, and acetylcholine receptors in the central nervous system of the rat. Toxicological Sciences 2000; 57(1):112-120. (DoD-72)

The objective of this study was to evaluate the short-term effects of sarin on several enzymes and acetylcholine receptors concurrently, because of the central role of the cholinergic system in the manifestation of toxic symptoms of sarin. (Khan, et al, 2000) Previous studies have shown that changes in acetylcholine-related metabolism are the key regulators of central nervous system toxicity of sarin and other organophosphate chemicals. The acute effects of intramuscular injections of sarin were studied in male Sprague-Dawley rats. The rats were treated with injections of either 1 x LD50 (lethal dose in 50% of the animals) and sacrificed at several different time points, up to 20 hours after treatment; or they were treated with smaller doses of sarin (0.01, 0.1 or 0.5 x LD50) and sacrificed 15 hours after treatment. Plasma butyrylcholinesterase levels (BChE) and brain acetylcholinesterase levels (AChE) were inhibited 45-50%, 30 minutes after the LD50 dose. BChE in the plasma and AChE in various brain regions remained inhibited for up to 20 hours after a single LD50 dose. No inhibition in plasma BChE was observed 20 hours after treatment with doses lower than the LD50 dose. Another enzyme, choline acetyltransferase (ChAT) is considered a specific marker of cholinergic innervation in the brain, because it catalyzes the final step in the biosynthesis of acetylcholine. ChAT activity was increased in various brain regions 6 hours after LD50 treatment, and this elevated enzyme activity persisted up to 20 hours after treatment. Overall, sarin caused significant inhibition of brain region-specific AChE and activation of ChAT.

The elevated activity of ChAT in the brain may enhance the availability of acetylcholine above and beyond that caused by inhibition of AChE alone. This combination of effects on enzymes could lead to overstimulation of the receptors for acetylcholine in the brain.

Subchronic effects following a single sarin exposure on blood-brain and blood-testes barrier permeability, acetylcholinesterase, and acetylcholine receptors in the central nervous system of rat: a dose-response study. Journal of Toxicology and Environmental Health 2000; 61(8);695-707. (DoD-72)

The objective of this study was to evaluate the effects after 90 days of a single intramuscular dose of sarin in male Sprague-Dawley rats. (Jones, et al, 2000) The animals were treated once with various doses of sarin (0.01, 0.1, 0.5, or 1 x LD50-lethal dose in 50% of the animals), and then sacrificed 90 days later. The blood-brain permeability was measured in various brain regions at 90 days. The brainstem showed a significant decrease in the permeability of the blood-brain barrier (BBB), at the 1 x LD50 dose. There were no changes in the permeability of the BBB at any dose in the other brain regions. Plasma butyrylcholinesterase (BChE) activity was at control levels at 90 days, reflecting recovery of the enzyme activity from its initial inhibition. At the 1 x LD50 dose, acetylcholinesterase activity (AChE) in the brain cortex remained inhibited at 90 days, whereas AChE activity in the brainstem showed an increase. These results suggest that BBB changes in the brainstem and inhibition of AChE in the cortex are persistent as long as 90 days after a single 1 x LD50 dose of sarin. Even though the rats had recovered from all the acute clinical effects, there were persistent changes in the brain that could play a role in neuropathological conditions, long after a single, high-dose sarin exposure.

H. Pyridostigmine Bromide

One published study in 2000 focused on the effects of pyridostigmine bromide (PB) alone. (Li, et al, 2000) The objective of this study was to evaluate the potential of PB to produce cell death in the brains of male Sprague-Dawley rats. Rats were injected (intraperitoneally) with one of four doses of PB twice daily for 4 days. Apoptosis, which is a sequential process of programmed cell death, was evaluated by special histological studies of the brains. Apoptotic brain cell death was noted in cerebral cortex of some rats, at all 4 doses, and at the highest dose, it was also noted in the striatum and hippocampus of some rats. These cell death processes were blocked by pretreatment with atropine 30 minutes before PB injection. The results of these experiments in rats cannot be directly extrapolated to humans because of the very high doses of PB, and because the route of administration was injection directly into the abdomen. PB did not cause a significant decrease in brain cholinesterase activity, which implies that PB did not cross the blood brain barrier. The authors stated that the mechanism could possibly be due to either central or peripheral action. The possibility of peripheral action has been suggested by other studies. (Van Haaren, et al, 1999, 2000; Chaney, et al, 1999, 2000)

I. Interactions of Exposures (Pyridostigmine Bromide in Combination with Other Chemicals or Stress)

Overview:

Five published laboratory studies in 2000 focused on the effects of pyridostigmine bromide in combination with stress. (Grauer, et al, 2000; Sinton, et al, 2000; Servatius, et al, 2000; Somani, et al, 2000; Verma-Ahuja, et al, 2000)

Four published laboratory studies focused on the effects of pyridostigmine bromide (PB), in combination with other chemicals (DEET or permethrin). (Hoy, et al, 2000a; Hoy, et al, 2000b; van Haaren, et al, 2000; Chaney, et al, 2000)

Stress alone has been shown to induce significant changes in blood-brain barrier (BBB) permeability in young rats and mice, but little or no change in adults. Reports in rodents have shown effects of exogenous stressors like forced swim, restraint, or heat stress on the entry of radioactive tracers, dyes, or viruses into the CNS. These studies have been conducted primarily in young, immature animals. (Ben-Nathan, et al, 1989; Dvorska, et al, 1992; Sharma, et al, 1991; Sharma, et al, 1992; Sharma, et al, 1995; Wijsman and Shivers, 1993) The overall conclusions in a recent study were "There is no evidence that exogenous stress increases BBB permeability in mature rodents." (Sinton, et al, 2000)

The one exception, regarding adult rodents, was a study by Friedman that suggested that pyridostigmine bromide (PB) could enter the brain of adult mice subjected to forced swimming stress. (Friedman, et al, 1996) Friedman demonstrated that the dose of PB required to produce 50% inhibition of brain acetylcholinesterase (AChE) activity in stressed FVB/n mice was only 1% of the dose of PB required to produce 50% inhibition in non-stressed mice. However, there is some experimental evidence that the FVB/n mouse strain may have an unusually permeable BBB. (Telang, et al, 1999) Furthermore, the intensity of the reported effect in Friedman's study (more than 50% inhibition) could not be easily explained by the limited and localized changes in BBB permeability that had previously been reported to be induced by stress. (Sharma, et al, 1991)

Several studies have recently evaluated whether stress can increase BBB permeability, and can therefore enhance penetration of PB into the brain. These have included several species and strains of animals: 3 different strains of mice (Telang, et al, 1999; Chaney, et al, 1999; Grauer, et al, 2000); guinea pigs (Lallement, et al, 1998); and 3 strains of rats (Sinton, et al, 2000; Chaney, et al, 2000). These studies have included several types of acute stressors: forced swimming stress (Telang, et al, 1999; Grauer, et al, 2000; Sinton, et al, 2000); heat stress (Lallement, et al, 1998; Sinton, et al, 2000); severe cold stress (Grauer, et al, 2000); restraint stress (Sinton, et al, 2000); and chemical stress (coadministration of high doses of DEET) (Chaney, et al, 1999; Chaney, et al, 2000).

All of these recent studies have reached the conclusion that stress does not increase BBB permeability to PB, and that PB does not penetrate the brain, even at lethal doses. For example, Sinton, et al, concluded "to the extent that cross-species comparisons are valid" between humans and rodents, "the effects of stress on BBB permeability to PB are unlikely to explain the chronic CNS symptoms reported by some Gulf War veterans." (Sinton, Haley, et al, 2000) This conclusion is particularly noteworthy because it is contradictory to a report by one of the authors. He had previously reported an association between a history of PB use and long-term CNS symptoms, based on a questionnaire administered to a small group of Gulf War veterans. (Haley, et al, 1997b)

These recent findings about PB and stress are consistent with the conclusion of a recent White House report on illnesses in Gulf War veterans, as follows: "Several more recent studies have failed to reproduce this finding [of Friedman's study in 1996] using a variety of species, a variety of stressful stimuli, and extremely high doses of PB. If PB does not cross the BBB, it is very unlikely to cause changes in brain function." (White House, 2000)

Interactions of PB in Combination with Stress-Individual Studies:

The objective of the Grauer study was to determine the effects in mice of pyridostigmine bromide (PB), with or without stress. (Grauer, et al, 2000) PB was injected at a dose that was equivalent to about 0.1% of the LD50. Two strains of adult mice were used, including CD-1 and FVB/n, the same strain used in Friedman's study. (Friedman, et al, 1996) There was no inhibition of brain AChE due to mild stress (swimming) or severe stress (standing in ice water). No change in brain AChE activity was detected in any of the groups treated with PB, with or without stress. Even with variations in gender, strain of mouse, and type of stressor, the authors concluded that they could not replicate Friedman's findings that suggested that PB could effect brain AChE following stress.

2. Sinton, CM, Fitch, TE, Petty, F, and Haley, RW. Stressful manipulations that elevate corticosterone reduce blood-brain barrier permeability to pyridostigmine in the rat. Toxicology and Applied Pharmacology 2000; 165(1):99-105. (Not Federally funded; funded by the Perot Foundation)

The objective of Sinton study was to determine the effects of stress on the permeability to PB in the brains of two strains of adult male rats, Long-Evans and Wistar. (Sinton, et al, 2000) Three main types of stress were used: a forced swim stress, a restraint stress, and a combination of swim and restraint. In addition, a smaller number of rats were subjected to heat stress. Rats were injected intraperitoneally with one of five doses of PB; the three highest doses caused severe signs of toxicity. Both the dosage of PB and the effects of each type of stress were significantly associated with decreased brain AChE levels. However, stress reduced the penetration of PB across the BBB. The authors concluded "to the extent that cross-species comparisons are valid" between humans and rodents, "the effects of stress on BBB permeability to PB are unlikely to explain the chronic CNS symptoms reported by some Gulf War veterans." This conclusion is particularly noteworthy because it is contradictory to a report by one of the authors. He had previously reported an association between a history of PB use and long-term CNS symptoms, based on a questionnaire administered to a small group of Gulf War veterans. (Haley, et al, 1997)

3. Servatius, RJ, Ottenweller, JE, Guo, W, Beldowicz, D, Guanping, Z, and Natelson, BH. Effects of inescapable stress and treatment with pyridostigmine bromide on plasma butyrylcholinesterase and the acoustic startle response in rats. Physiology and Behavior 2000; 69(3):239-246. (VA-49)

The objectives of the Servatius study were 1) to determine whether exposure to inescapable stress decreased plasma butyrylcholinesterase (BuChE) levels in male Sprague-Dawley rats; and 2) to determine whether concurrent exposure to stress and PB would produce persistent neurobehavioral changes in rats. (Servatius, et al, 2000) A supine restraint protocol was chosen to evaluate the effects of inescapable stress. Exposure to supine restraint alone induced a persistent decrease in plasma BuChE levels. However, the combination of stress plus PB did not cause further decreases in BuChE levels. Exposure to restraint stress caused an exaggerated startle response, evident on the last day of stress (Day 7) and for an additional 24 hours. This exaggerated response did not persist at 8, 15, or 22 days after cessation of stress. PB also caused an exaggerated startle response over the same time period, but to a lesser degree. However, treatment with PB appeared to antagonize the effects of stress on startle response (stress plus PB had less effect than stress alone). Two major strengths of this study included the use of oral PB doses that were relevant to those used by humans, and the follow-up period of 22 days after the cessation of treatment with stress or PB, which demonstrated reversibility of the effects on startle response.

4. Somani, SM, Husain, K, Asha, T, and Helfert, R. Interactive and delayed effects of pyridostigmine and physical stress on biochemical and histological changes in peripheral tissues of mice. Journal of Applied Toxicology 2000; 20(4):327-334. (DoD-62)

The objective of the Somani study was to investigate the effects of PB and treadmill exercise on cholinesterase activity and histology of peripheral tissues in male, adult NIH Swiss mice. (Somani, et al, 2000) There were four groups of mice: sedentary controls; exercise training for 10 weeks; PB during weeks 5 and 6, but no exercise training; and exercise training for 10 weeks, plus PB during weeks 5 and 6. The oral dose of PB in the mice was chosen to correspond to the dose (1.2 mg per kg body weight) and duration (2 weeks) that veterans used during the Gulf War. Each group of mice was sacrificed at 10 weeks, at which time blood and muscle chemistries and histological studies were performed. Overall, there were no significant chemistry changes due to exercise alone or PB alone. There were only a few significant changes in blood and muscle chemistries related to the combination of exercise plus PB. There were no obvious histological abnormalities in the triceps muscle among the four groups.

5. Verma-Ahuja, S, Husain, K, Verhulst, S, Espinosa, JA, and Somani, SM. Delayed effects of pyridostigmine and exercise training on acetylcholinesterase and muscle tension in mouse lower extremity. Archives of Toxicology 2000: 74(9):539-546. (DoD-62)

REV_00137400

The objective of the Verma-Ahuja study was to investigate the effects of PB and treadmill exercise on muscle tension and acetylcholinesterase activity in male, adult NIH Swiss mice. (Verma-Ahuja, et al, 2000) There were four groups of mice: sedentary controls; exercise training for 10 weeks; PB during weeks 5 and 6, but no exercise training; and exercise training for 10 weeks, plus PB during weeks 5 and 6. Each group of mice was sacrificed at 10 weeks, at which time muscle tension studies and blood and muscle chemistries were performed. There were no differences in triceps muscle levels of AChE among the controls, the exercise alone group, and the PB alone group. The exercise plus PB group demonstrated a significant decrease in AChE levels in triceps muscle (79% of control levels; $p < 0.01$). Muscle tension was measured in the lower extremity by flexing the foot and stimulation of the peroneal nerve. There was a significant increase in muscle tension in the exercise plus PB group, compared to the control and exercise alone groups. The authors do not discuss the relevance of a daily, strenuous treadmill test in mice to sedentary or exercising humans. There was no follow-up after cessation of the treadmill exercise to determine if the changes in muscle tension or blood and muscle chemistries were prolonged, which is relevant to the possible effects in humans.

Interactions of PB in Combination with Other Chemicals-Individual Studies:

1. Hoy, JB, Cornell, JA, Karlix, JL, Schmidt, CJ, Tebbett, IR, and van Haaren, F. Interactions of pyridostigmine bromide, DEET, and permethrin alter locomotor behavior of rats. Veterinary and Human Toxicology 2000a; 42(2):65-71. (DoD-37)

The objective of the first Hoy study was to determine if there were interactions of various combinations of PB, DEET and permethrin on the locomotor behavior of male and female Sprague-Dawley rats. (Hoy, et al, 2000a) Various doses of PB and DEET were given by gavage, and various doses of permethrin were injected. The routes of exposures for DEET (oral) and permethrin (injection) in the rats caused higher doses than could have been absorbed in a few hours of dermal exposure in soldiers. The three chemicals were tested singly and in various combinations to determine the effects on the rate of locomotion in a one square meter open-field arena, during a two-hour period. Single drug effects were very limited with the doses tested. In particular, PB caused no effects at 10 mg per kg of body weight. Two-drug administrations at half the single-drug doses resulted in significant interactions in male rats only. Female rats did not show any significant interactions. In male rats, the combinations of permethrin plus PB or permethrin plus DEET caused a significantly decreased speed of locomotion. There was no follow-up to determine if the behavioral changes due to the chemical combinations were prolonged, which is relevant to the possible effects in humans.

2. Hoy, JB, Cornell, JA, Karlix, JL, Tebbett, IR, and van Haaren, F. Repeated coadministrations of pyridostigmine bromide, DEET, and permethrin alter locomotor behavior of rats. Veterinary and Human Toxicology 2000b; 42(2):72-76. (DoD-37)

The objective of the second Hoy study was to determine the effects of repeated administrations of PB, DEET and permethrin, alone and in combination, on the locomotor behavior of male and female Sprague-Dawley rats. (Hoy, et al, 2000b) Various doses of PB and DEET were given by gavage, and various doses of permethrin were injected. The three chemicals were tested singly and in various combinations to determine the effects on the rate of locomotion in a one square meter open-field arena. Twenty-four hours after the last of 7 daily drug administrations, locomotor behavior was quantified by video camera for one hour. Single-drug administrations caused no significant effects compared to controls. Both male and female rats given DEET plus PB had a significantly slower locomotion rate. Males given DEET plus permethrin had a significantly faster locomotion rate. Three-drug administration (at one-third the single-drug doses) caused no significant effects. There was no follow-up to determine if the behavioral changes due to the chemical combinations were prolonged, which is relevant to the possible effects in humans.

3. van Haaren, F, Cody, B, Hoy, JB, Karlix, JL, Schmidt, CJ, Tebbett, IR, and Wielbo, D. The effects of pyridostigmine bromide and permethrin, alone or in combination, on response acquisition in male and female rats. Pharmacology Biochemistry and Behavior 2000; 66(4):739-746. (DoD-37)

REV_00137401

The objective of the van Haaren study was to investigate the effects of PB and permethrin, alone or in combination, on the acquisition of a learned response in male and female Sprague-Dawley rats. (van Haaren, et al, 2000) The rats were treated with PB or distilled water by gavage for 7 days. Half of the rats also received an intraperitoneal injection of permethrin, at one of two doses, before they were placed in an experiment, in which they could earn food pellets by pressing a lever in a learning chamber. Permethrin alone had no effect on acquisition of the learned response. PB caused delayed acquisition of the learned response in male and female rats, and decreased the number of reinforced responses. Permethrin levels were higher in rats that were treated with PB; however, the combination of PB plus permethrin did not cause a decrement in learning, compared to the rats treated with PB alone. There were no measurements of brain levels of PB, permethrin, or acetylcholinesterase; therefore, it is unknown whether these chemicals crossed the blood-brain barrier. There was no follow-up to determine if the behavioral changes due to the chemicals were prolonged, which is relevant to the possible effects in humans.

4. Chaney, LA, Wineman, RW, Rockhold, RW, and Hume, AS. Acute effects of an insect repellant, N,N-Diethyl-m-toluamide, on cholinesterase inhibition induced by pyridostigmine bromide in rats. Toxicology and Applied Pharmacology 2000; 165(2):107-114. (Not Federally funded)

The objective of the Chaney study was to investigate changes in acetylcholinesterase (AChE) levels in the brain and periphery (diaphragm, heart, and blood) after injection of PB and/or DEET in male Sprague-Dawley rats. (Chaney, et al, 2000) The intent was to determine if the combination caused inhibition of brain AChE. Several animals receiving the highest PB alone dose experienced seizures and died shortly after dosing. Combinations of PB and DEET, at all PB doses, caused seizures and death in some animals. PB alone did not alter brain AChE levels, even at doses that caused lethality. DEET alone had no effects on peripheral or brain AChE levels. PB plus DEET caused a significant decrease of brain AChE at only the highest PB dose (60% of the control levels). This study demonstrates that doses of PB alone and PB plus DEET, that were high enough to cause seizures and lethality, did not cause an effect on brain AChE in most animals. This means that even these high doses did not cause increased permeability of the blood-brain barrier. Because these massive doses caused seizures and death within minutes, the results of this study cannot be directly extrapolated to humans.

III. RESEARCH FUNDING TRENDS

A. Overview

Appendix A provides details of the Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses Research Database. It was last updated during the second quarter of Fiscal Year 2001 (through March 31, 2001). Research projects are grouped according to the Department that is responsible for the conduct or sponsorship of the research.

Each entry in the database includes:

- Project Title
- Responsible Federal Agency
- Study Location
- Project Start-up Date
- Project Completion Date (estimated if ongoing)
- Overall Objectives of Project
- Specific Aims of Project
- Methods of Approach
- Expected Products (Milestones)
- Current Status/Results
- Publications

Two descriptors can approximately categorize each research project. The first descriptor is a series of research focus areas. The research focus areas are categorized as follows:

- Prevalence and risk factors for symptoms and alterations in general health status
- Brain and nervous system function
- Chemical weapons
- Environmental toxicology (e.g. studies focused on specific environmental toxicants such as pesticides, oil well fires, etc.)
- Reproductive health
- Depleted uranium
- Leishmaniasis
- Immune function
- Pyridostigmine bromide
- Mortality experience
- Interactions of exposures (chemical, biological, pharmacological, physiological, etc.)
- Prevention of diseases (i.e. studies that will produce knowledge that could lead to disease prevention strategies)
- Treatment
- Diagnosis (i.e. studies that will improve the ability to diagnose previously unexplained conditions, or to better refine diagnoses with new tools)

Each project is assigned up to three focus areas as categorical descriptors. This allows accounting for projects that cover multiple focus areas. For example, a project on the neurophysiological effects of exposure to sarin in animals would have a focus on the brain and nervous system, and a focus on chemical weapons. The number of focus areas (between one and three) assigned to a project depends on the project itself.

The other descriptor for each project is Research Type. The Federal Government defines Research as systematic investigation designed to develop or contribute to generalizable knowledge. Each research project on Gulf War veterans' illnesses uses a method of approach to test a specific research hypothesis. Approaches range in type from mechanistic research, addressing potential biological mechanisms of causation, to clinical and epidemiological research that attempt to determine illness prevalence and risk factors. Although precise categorization of research types can be difficult because of overlapping methodologies, research projects can be divided into the following general types:

MECHANISTIC RESEARCH: Research into underlying mechanisms of diseases and illnesses using in vitro and in vivo models.

CLINICAL RESEARCH: Application of an intervention, such as in a controlled drug trial, or use of methodologies such as case-control studies to define disease risk factors.

EPIDEMIOLOGY RESEARCH: Study of the distribution and determinants of disease in human populations. It includes population-based studies focused on outcomes such as mortality, symptoms, hospitalizations, etc., using devices such as postal surveys, telephone interviews, and medical records reviews.

In addition to the research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses, the RWG also tracks development work. In general, development is the systematic use of the knowledge or understanding gained from research directed toward the production of materials; devices; systems; or methods, including design, development, and improvement of prototypes and new processes.

Within the context of Gulf War veterans' illnesses, the RWG categorizes activities as development as follows:

DEVELOPMENT: An activity that satisfies the general definition of development described above, and is directed toward new biologically based prevention, intervention, and treatment measures.

The Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses Research Database catalogs only research and development activities that either directly involve Gulf War veterans, or has been initiated to answer specific questions about risk factors. An example of the latter is a research project using animal models to determine health effects of low-level chemical warfare agents. The database does not account for the vast accumulated knowledge derived from the nation's investment in biomedical research over the past 40 years.

The Gulf War Veterans' Research Database only contains research that is Federally sponsored. This includes research conducted by Federal scientists, as well as that by non-federal scientists supported by Federal research funds through grants, contracts, and cooperative agreements. It is not possible to accurately track research efforts that fall within the private sector or otherwise outside of the purview of the Federal Government. Nonetheless, the RWG attempts to stay abreast of all research relevant to Gulf War veterans' illnesses. The RWG accomplishes this by monitoring the peer reviewed published scientific literature, attending scientific meetings, and even using newspaper reports and personal accounts of researchers.

Regardless of the source of support for particular research projects, the RWG will ensure that all research, which has been published in peer reviewed scientific literature, will be used in formal assessments of the nature and causes of Gulf War veterans' illnesses. A number of projects that were not Federally funded have been reviewed in Section II. Research Results of this Annual Report to Congress.

A formal assessment of the nature and causes of illnesses in Gulf War veterans has been included in this Annual Report to Congress in Appendix C. In 1996, the RWG identified 21 major research questions. The comprehensive Gulf War research portfolio has addressed each of these questions, and relevant results have been published on each one. Appendix C provides a formal assessment of the progress made on each of these 21 questions.

The following sections provide a quantitative overview of the current research portfolio on Gulf War veterans' illnesses and the evolution of the portfolio over time since 1994. Topics that are covered include overall research expenditures from 1994-2001 (projected), and the types and areas of research in which the Federal Government has invested.

B. Research Funding

All current Federal research projects directly related to Gulf War veterans' illnesses are sponsored by VA, DoD, or HHS. From 1994 through 2000, the Departments have sponsored 193 distinct research projects on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. This does not include research projects that recently have been selected for funding but are currently in final contract negotiations. Nor does it account for anticipated projects arising from competition of proposals submitted in response to new initiatives, such as the planned DoD Broad Agency Announcement (BAA) for 2001.

A table in Appendix A lists all of the research and development projects and programs supported now or in the past by the Federal Government. The appropriated funds centrally distributed to each program or project are shown in the fiscal years that funds were obligated. Many extramural projects are multi-year efforts for which funds are obligated at the beginning of the project period.

Table III-1 is a summary of research expenditures by DoD, VA, and HHS between FY94 and FY00, and a projection of funding into FY01. Currently, the Federal Government is projecting cumulative expenditures of $173.6 million for research from FY94 through FY01. As of September 30, 2000, 100 projects were completed. As of March 31, 2001, an additional 16 projects were completed, and 77 projects were ongoing (40% of total of 193 projects).

Table III-2 is a year-by-year account of new and completed projects.

Table III-1. does not include funds to cover operational costs for administration, infrastructure, etc. For example, the VA research appropriation does not pay for clinician/investigator salaries. In addition, Table III.1. does not include funding for activities performed by members of the RWG (salaries, travel, etc.). The FY'01 funds are estimated, and they do not include funds for anticipated or future solicitations.

C. Diversity of Research Approaches

The funds that have been invested in research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses over the years have gone into a broad-based portfolio with respect to research type and research focus area. Figure III-1 illustrates the number of projects of each research type for each year since FY94. On average, epidemiology and clinical research have each comprised approximately one third of the total number of projects. The remaining third has been divided between mechanistic research and development, with the larger share going to mechanistic research. In particular, the numbers of clinical and mechanistic research projects have increased more rapidly over time.

The distribution of projects across different research focus areas is illustrated in Figure III-2. Projects for each focus area are categorized, based on which of the focus areas are listed as one of the three areas assigned to each project. The total number of projects by research focus areas is shown in Figure III-2 in two ways. For each focus area, a black bar represents the total number of projects for which that focus area is listed as being primary. A clear bar represents the total number of projects for which the focus area is listed as being secondary or tertiary. Thus the total height of a bar represents the total number of projects for which the focus area is listed as primary, secondary, or tertiary. By showing the data this way, the multiplicative effects of research investments are demonstrated. For example, a project that examines the effects of Pyridostigmine Bromide on the Brain and Nervous System is counted under both of these focus areas.

As can be seen in Figure III-2, the overall emphasis of research has been greatest in the focus areas of the Brain and Nervous System and in Symptoms and General Health. This reflects the focus of epidemiological efforts on the prevalence of symptoms and illnesses in Gulf War veterans, and the focus of clinical research efforts on risk factors for illnesses. The focus on the brain and nervous system is a result of both the dominance of health complaints in this area, and the fact that many of the potential exposures in the Gulf were to neurotoxins.

The number of research projects in the various research focus areas has changed over time since 1994 as a reflection of the evolution of issues centered on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. Of note is a relatively greater increase over the years of research on chemical interactions, chemical warfare agents and pyridostigmine bromide. These increases are an outgrowth of increased concern over the health risks posed to veterans by exposures to multiple toxic agents at low levels.

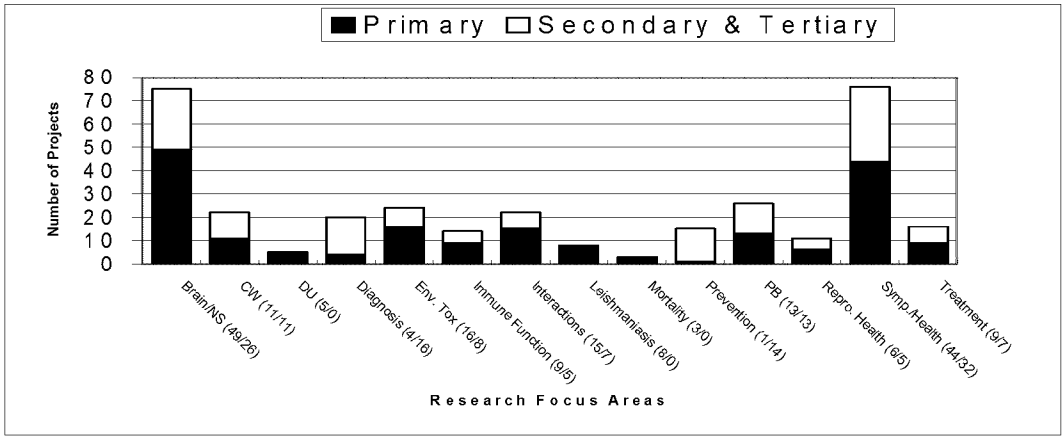

Figure III-2. Number of projects in each research focus area. Closed bars represent the number of projects with the focus area as primary; open bars represent the number of projects with the focus area being either secondary or tertiary. The first number within the parenthesis represents the number of projects with a primary research focus area. The second number represents the number of projects with a secondary or tertiary research focus area

IV. NEW RESEARCH PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

Several new research projects and initiatives that have been undertaken since last year's Annual Report to Congress are highlighted in this Section. These include the awarding of new research projects and the development of new research initiatives. In addition, this section provides an update of important accomplishments in 2000 for key research projects and initiatives.

Many of the new research projects and initiatives are responsive to recommendations from a variety of sources, including the Presidential Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses (PAC, 1996a; PAC, 1996b; PAC, 1997); the Institute of Medicine Committee on the Health Consequences of Service During the Persian Gulf War (IOM, 1995; IOM, 1996); the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee (SVAC, 1998); the Presidential Special Oversight Board (PSOB, 2000); and the RWG (PGVCB, 1995b; PGVCB, 1996b).

IV.A. NEW RESEARCH PROJECTS

IV. A. 1. New Research Projects Funded by the 2000 DoD Broad Agency Announcements

In 1998, DoD established new funding for programmed research. The purpose of this program element funding is to address Gulf War veterans' illnesses issues, which may also be of concern in future deployments. These include issues identified in both the research plans of the PGVCB and the Presidential Review Directive 5. (PGVCB, 1995b; PGVCB, 1996b; NSTC, 1998) This planned funding is approximately $20 million per year for fiscal year 1999 through fiscal year 2002, and $5 million per year thereafter. This funding makes it possible to organize multi-year research and improves the ability to respond to new research needs based on discoveries in the currently funded programs. The program is guided by a tri-service DoD panel and coordinated with the RWG.

The overall objective of this effort is to enhance force health protection in future deployments, through research specifically targeted to solving problems that emerged from service in the Gulf War. Specific research areas include:

1. prevention and treatment of persistent stress symptoms;
2. methods to assess health hazards from toxic chemicals and mixtures and to monitor exposures;
3. improved safety assessments of medical materiel, including potential interactions in operational environments;
4. epidemiological studies to continue long-term follow-up of Gulf War veterans and to improve health status monitoring in future deployments; and
5. improved and accelerated research on leishmaniasis prevention, diagnosis, and treatment.

In coordination with the RWG, DoD developed a new research initiative for Fiscal Year 2000. Under this initiative, DoD solicited new research proposals for studies consistent with current concepts of Force Health Protection. There were four Broad Agency Announcements (BAAs), each with a deadline of July 26, 2000.

The specific requests focused on the following four areas of research interest:

1. Epidemiological Investigations of Deployment Health Monitoring Methods

The purpose of these epidemiological studies is to fill critical knowledge gaps for monitoring soldier health during deployments. Threats to health during deployments might include psychological stress, toxic chemical exposures, environmental stressors, and infectious agents. The focus is on physiologically based methods to assess deployment health consequences, through a demonstrated change in health. Projects are required to have a strong biological basis (i.e., objective measurements instead of subjective/questionnaire assessments). Studies are specifically sought in four topic areas:

a. psychological health status, including establishment of mental health baselines of military populations;
b. practical methods for large-scale studies to assess changes in male and female reproductive fertility;
c. clinical illness associated with high frequency of deployments or perceived stress of deployments; and
d. coping strategies used by military personnel to alleviate symptoms associated with Gulf War deployment (e.g., alcohol or complementary and alternative medicine).

2. Deployment Stress Health and Performance Consequences

These studies focus on the effects of psychological stress on cognitive and physiological consequences. Studies should quantify the association between clinical health outcomes or militarily-relevant performance measures and various types of stress, which might be typically encountered in military field deployments (e.g., isolation, family separation, anxiety, inadequate sleep). The studies should explore biological stress measures, which may be useful predictors of health and performance decrements.

3. Biochemical and Physiological Markers to Assess Toxic Chemical Exposures and Health Effects in Deployed Military Personnel

These studies focus on applied physiologically based methods and techniques for assessment of toxic chemical exposures in deployed military personnel. The research should improve current methods and techniques or identify and develop new, readily applied, methods and techniques. Specifically, studies must identify and develop biological markers of exposure that enhance environmental monitoring or provide markers of effect related to exposures of individual service members. Methods and techniques should be applicable to risk assessment or health surveillance of toxic chemicals and chemical mixtures that are a concern in military deployments. Specific chemicals of interest include petrochemical products (including JP8 fuel), insecticides, insect repellents, and Chemical Agent Resistant Coating (CARC).

4. Toxicity of Militarily Relevant Heavy Metals

These studies focus on biological effects of heavy metals currently used or contemplated for use in armor and as armor penetrators. These include tungsten and tungsten alloys, depleted uranium, depleted uranium and titanium alloys, and oxidation products of these metals and their alloys. Inclusion of positive (e.g. lead) and negative (e.g. tantalum) controls should be considered in study designs. Outcomes of special interest include identification of mechanisms of injury to pulmonary, hepatic, renal, and nervous systems from particulate and solubilized forms; and localized soft tissue responses produced by embedded fragments (distinguishing foreign body, radiation, toxicological, and acute phase responses). Exposures should be based on realistic scenarios, and should consider current pharmacokinetic and pharmacodynamic knowledge of the metal or alloy under study. Epidemiological studies could be included based on exposure models.

A total of 62 proposals were submitted in response to these 4 BAAs. These proposals were scientifically peer reviewed by the American Institute of Biological Sciences. Highly meritorious proposals were chosen for funding by DoD program review and then were referred to the RWG for secondary review, based on interagency programmatic relevance. This review process is detailed in Section V. Research Management.

In early 2001, funding decisions were made and DoD undertook contract negotiations with principal investigators. The scope of work and funding level for each project should be finalized by the end of 2001, at which time the list of the newly funded projects will be announced.

IV.B. 2000 UPDATE OF KEY RESEARCH PROJECTS AND INITIATIVES

Three research initiatives are described in this section:

- one ongoing Institute of Medicine project;
- one completed White House report; and
- the 2001 Conference on Illnesses among Gulf War Veterans: A Decade of Scientific Research.

IV.B.1. Institute of Medicine Study of Health Effects Associated with Exposures during the Gulf War

In 1997, VA followed the recommendation of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses to contract for an assessment with an independent scientific organization, such as the National Academy of Sciences (NAS). (PAC, 1997) In its Special Report, the PAC recommended that the VA contract for a periodic review and Gulf War service. The object of such an analysis would be to determine statistical associations between service in the Gulf War and morbidity and mortality, while also considering whether a plausible biological mechanism exists, whether research results are capable of replication and of clinical significance, and whether the data withstand peer review." (PAC, 1997)

> "of the available scientific evidence regarding associations between illnesses

Public Law 105-368 was enacted on October 21, 1998, and was titled the "Veterans Programs Enhancement Act of 1998." It mandated that the VA contract with the NAS to perform a "review and evaluate the available scientific evidence regarding associations between illness and service in the Persian Gulf War." The Public Law stated that the NAS review should:

- identify the biological, chemical, or other toxic agents, environmental or wartime hazards, or preventive medicines or vaccines to which members of the Armed Forces may have been exposed;
- identify the illnesses associated with the agents, hazards, or medicines or vaccines; and
- identify the illnesses (including diagnosed illnesses and undiagnosed illnesses) for which there is scientific evidence of a higher prevalence among populations of Gulf War veterans when compared with other appropriate populations of individuals.

On June 24, 1998, four months before the passage of the Public Law, VA contracted with the Institute of Medicine (IOM) of the NAS to carry out the assessment. The purpose of the IOM project is to review the scientific and medical literature regarding adverse health effects associated with exposures experienced during the Gulf War. Scientific evidence concerning the association of exposures and illness will be examined taking into account:

- the strength of the scientific evidence and the appropriateness of the methods used to identify associations;
- whether the evidence indicates the levels of exposure of the studied populations were comparable to the exposures of Gulf War veterans; and
- whether there exists a plausible biological mechanism or other evidence of a causal relationship between exposure to the risk factor or factors and the medical conditions.

Different types of research findings, e.g., animal toxicology data, occupational exposure data, and epidemiological data, need to be analyzed and integrated. The review will include recommendations for additional scientific studies to resolve areas of continued scientific uncertainty related to the health effects of Gulf War service.

The first phase of the study summarized the medical literature on pyridostigmine bromide, depleted uranium, sarin and cyclosarin, and the anthrax and botulinum toxoid vaccines. The two chemical warfare agents were selected because Gulf War veterans may have had low-level exposure to them as a result of the demolitions at Khamisiyah. Phase one was funded for 27 months at a cost of $1.25 million. The IOM committee held their first meeting in January 1999 and they held six additional meetings through March 2000. The report on this first phase was published in September 2000, entitled Gulf War and Health: Volume 1. Depleted Uranium, Sarin, Pyridostigmine Bromide, Vaccines. The findings and research recommendations are summarized below.

During phase two, medical literature on pesticides and solvents used during the Gulf War is being reviewed. The cost of phase two is $3.57 million. This second phase began when a newly constituted IOM committee held its first meeting in February 2001. The methodology of the review will be the same in the second phase as in the first phase. IOM plans to publish the second report about 18 months after the first meeting, in September 2002.

The third phase will consist of a series of updates of the literature and the associations, to be conducted every two years. These periodic reviews are consistent with the language of Public Law 105-368.

REV_00137409

Findings and Recommendations of Gulf War and Health: Volume 1. Depleted Uranium, Sarin, Pyridostigmine Bromide, Vaccines (IOM, 2000), and VA, DoD, and HHS Plans for Implementation of IOM Recommendations

Sarin:

- IOM Findings on potential long-term effects of sarin: IOM concluded that there was "limited or suggestive evidence" of an association between "exposure to sarin at doses sufficient to cause acute cholinergic signs and symptoms and subsequent long-term health effects." IOM concluded that there was "inadequate evidence" to determine whether an association does or does not exist between "sarin at low doses insufficient to cause acute cholinergic signs and symptoms and subsequent adverse long-term effects."

- IOM Recommendations and Research Working Group Response (Note that all IOM research recommendations appear in italics.):

1. IOM: Long-term follow-up of populations exposed to sarin in the Matsumoto and Tokyo terrorist attacks.

    - The RWG concurs with IOM's recommendation that Japanese scientists should continue the long-term follow-up of populations exposed to sarin in the Matsumoto and Tokyo terrorist attacks. The RWG will keep apprised of the results of these studies.

2. IOM: Studies in experimental animals to investigate the long-term effects of an acute, short-term exposure to sarin at doses that do not cause overt cholinergic effects and minimal acetylcholinesterase inhibition.

    - Since 1996, DoD has funded several studies of the long-term effects of short-term sarin exposure at doses that do not cause overt symptoms and cause only minimal acetylcholinesterase inhibition. Nine toxicology studies are focusing on the effects of sarin, alone or in combination. These combinations have included PB, DEET, permethrin, chlorpyrifos, heat stress and/or exercise stress.

    - In addition to the IOM recommendation on animal studies on sarin, the RWG is coordinating three epidemiological studies that are focusing on the health of veterans potentially exposed to low-level sarin due to the demolitions at Khamisiyah. The results of one of these projects were published in 1999 (project DoD-1B). (Gray, 1999c) The conclusion was there were no differences in rates of health problems among Gulf War veterans, who were potentially exposed to subclinical levels of sarin, compared to Gulf War veterans who were not exposed. The second Khamisiyah-related project is being performed by the Oregon Health Sciences University (DoD-63). The purpose is to compare neurological symptoms and results of neuropsychological tests between Gulf War veterans, who were potentially exposed to low levels of sarin, versus Gulf War veterans who were not exposed. The third Khamisiyah-related project is being performed by the Medical Follow-Up Agency of the IOM (DoD-69). The purpose is to compare mortality, hospitalizations, and symptoms between Gulf War veterans, who were potentially exposed to low levels of sarin, versus Gulf War veterans who were not exposed.

    - In addition to the Khamisiyah studies, the RWG is coordinating a contract for MFUA to perform an epidemiologic study of the long-term effects of short-term exposure to nerve agents in human volunteers in experiments conducted at Aberdeen Proving Ground in the 1950s to 1970s (DoD-93).

3. IOM: Research on genetic factors that may alter susceptibility to sarin toxicity.

    - VA and DoD have funded a number of research projects on genetic factors that may alter the susceptibility to sarin and/or PB toxicity. These studies are described in detail in the section on PB below.

REV_00137410

Pyridostigmine Bromide (PB):

- IOM Findings on potential long-term effects of PB: IOM concluded that there was "inadequate evidence" to determine whether an association does or does not exist between PB and long-term adverse health effects.

- IOM Recommendations and Research Working Group Response:

1. IOM: Research on chemical interactions between PB and other agents such as stressful stimuli, and certain insecticides.

    - Since 1994, VA and DoD have funded 26 projects related to PB, alone or in combination with other chemicals or stressful stimuli. In particular, VA and DoD have funded 18 projects on the potential interactions between PB and other agents. Six of these projects have published results, focusing on the effects of PB in rodents, in combination with DEET, permethrin, swimming stress, restraint stress, or exercise stress (projects VA-49, DoD-10, DoD-37, DoD-62, DoD-65, DoD-75). One important and consistent result of recent studies is that stressful stimuli, such as swimming stress or restraint stress, do not cause an increase in the permeability of the blood-brain barrier, or cause PB to cross the blood-brain barrier into the brain. In 1996, the earliest research in this area was performed, which indicated increased permeability of the blood brain barrier to PB, due to swimming stress in a particular strain of mice. Several more recent studies have failed to replicate this finding using a variety of species, a variety of types of stressful stimuli, and extremely high doses of PB.

2. IOM: Research on differences in genetic susceptibility (e.g., genetic polymorphisms of butyrylcholinesterase or paraoxonase) that may contribute to increased risk of disease.

    - VA and DoD have funded eight projects on genetic factors that may alter susceptibility to the effects of PB or sarin, including polymorphisms of enzymes. Six projects in humans are evaluating the effects of genetic differences in polymorphisms of acetylcholinesterase, butyrylcholinesterase, and/or paraoxonase (projects VA-5, DoD-21, DoD-60, DoD-64, DoD-65, DoD-111). Two projects in rats are evaluating the effects of genetic differences in polymorphisms of acetylcholinesterase and butyrylcholinesterase (VA-5D, VA-49).

3. IOM: Epidemiological studies on the possible long-term health effects of PB.

    - The RWG concurs with IOM that neurologists, who perform long-term follow-up of the course and treatment of myasthenia patients, should consider the possible long-term effects of PB. These patients take PB for many years. IOM concluded that PB has been used safely and effectively in thousands of myasthenia gravis patients since the 1950s. However, there has not been a systematic evaluation to determine if there are subtle long-term effects. The RWG plans to keep apprised of the results of such long-term studies of myasthenia gravis patients, and contacts have been instituted on this issue with the Myasthenia Gravis Foundation of America.

Vaccines:

- IOM Findings on the potential long-term effects of vaccines: IOM concluded that there was "inadequate evidence" to determine whether an association does or does not exist between anthrax vaccination, botulinum toxoid vaccination, or multiple vaccinations, and long-term adverse health effects.

- IOM Recommendations and Research Working Group Response:

1. IOM: Long-term systematic research to examine potential adverse effects of anthrax and botulinum toxoid vaccination in multiple species and strains of animals.

REV_00137411

- The RWG concurs that long-term research is needed to examine potential adverse effects of anthrax and botulinum toxoid vaccination in experimental animals. Such research is underway in DoD laboratories, including more than 50 projects. Also, CDC has recently funded non-human primate studies of the health effects and efficacy of the anthrax vaccine.

- In 2000, the CDC Anthrax Group began a collaborative effort with DoD to study the safety and effectiveness of vaccines used against biological agents, especially the anthrax vaccine. This effort includes addressing the risk factors for various reactions, including differences in rates between men and women; developing better measurements of vaccine effectiveness; reducing the number of injections in the series; and changing the route of administration from subcutaneous to intramuscular.

2. IOM: Identification of cohorts of Gulf War veterans and Gulf War era veterans, for whom vaccination records exist, followed by careful studies of current symptoms, functional status, and disease status.

    - The CDC published a study of Air Force Gulf War veterans in 1998, which included measuring antibodies to anthrax and botulinum to determine which individuals had received the vaccines (HHS-2). (Fukuda, et al, 1998) The CDC found no relationship between the vaccinations and the development of a multisymptom illness (chronic symptoms of fatigue, cognitive and mood problems, and musculoskeletal pain).

    - The United Kingdom has also published a study in 2000 on a cohort of 923 Gulf War veterans for whom vaccination records exist (DoD-39). (Hotopf, et al, 2000) There was no association between having received the anthrax vaccine and the development of multisymptom illness, as defined by CDC.

3. IOM: Long-term longitudinal studies of the participants in the Anthrax Vaccine Immunization Program that would actively monitor and systematically collect and analyze data about symptoms, functional status, and disease status.

    - In 1999, DoD funded a long-term longitudinal study of participants in the Anthrax Vaccine Immunization Program. The Naval Health Research Center has established DoD-wide surveillance of hospitalizations in military hospitals, linking these to data on anthrax vaccine recipients (project DoD-99). This active surveillance system ensures early detection of any associations between vaccinations and severe reactions that require hospitalizations. In addition, there are several ongoing projects that are following smaller groups of vaccine recipients to evaluate adverse effects.

    - IOM summarized several of these smaller completed and ongoing human studies, nearly all of which are unpublished. (IOM, 2000) IOM strongly urged the DoD investigators who are conducting these studies to submit their results to peer reviewed journals for publication. Additionally, IOM recently started a new two-year study on the safety and efficacy of the anthrax vaccine, funded by DoD. This new study will review some of the unpublished, non-peer reviewed information that was not previously available. CDC has also recently funded a two-year IOM study of the safety and efficacy of the anthrax vaccine.

Depleted Uranium (DU):

- IOM Findings on the potential long-term health effects of DU: IOM concluded that there is "limited or suggestive evidence" that there is no association between exposure to uranium and "lung cancer at cumulative internal dose levels lower than 200 millisieverts or 25 centigrays." IOM also concluded that there is "limited or suggestive evidence" that there is no association between exposure to uranium and "clinically significant renal dysfunction." IOM concluded that there was "inadequate evidence" to determine whether an association does or does not exist for several other potential long-term health effects.

- IOM Recommendations and Research Working Group Response:

1. IOM: Continued follow-up of the Baltimore cohort of Gulf War veterans with DU exposure. Long-term studies of the health of other Gulf War veterans at high risk for DU exposure (e.g. cleanup or radiation control units).

    - The RWG concurs with the long-term follow-up of the veterans in the Baltimore cohort, who were injured during friendly fire incidents. (Hooper, et al, 1999; McDiarmid, et al, 2000) This cohort was expanded in 1999, beyond the original 33 individuals. Approximately 100 veterans were involved in friendly fire incidents. OSAGWI has interviewed each of these individuals, and invited them to participate in the Baltimore program. (OSAGWI, 2000a) While the Baltimore researchers have seen no definitive evidence of adverse clinical outcomes associated with uranium exposure to date, the veterans who were involved in the friendly fire incidents will remain under continuing medical surveillance.

    - In addition, since mid-1998, VA and DoD have offered a DU medical evaluation to hundreds of other veterans with potential DU exposure, such as those involved in cleanup operations or radiation control units. Individuals who performed these functions have been interviewed and invited to participate in the DU medical evaluation program. (OSAGWI, 2000a) To date, the published data have shown that only veterans who have retained metallic fragments have demonstrated persistently elevated urinary uranium levels. (McDiarmid, et al, 2001)

2. IOM: Continued follow-up of the cohorts of uranium processing workers.

    - The RWG concurs that the long-term follow-up should continue of cohorts of uranium processing workers. Many of these studies involve employees of manufacturing facilities managed by the Department of Energy or its contractors. Because of the recent increase in interest in the employees of these facilities, ongoing surveillance is likely to intensify in the future. The RWG will keep apprised of the results of these studies.

3. IOM: Additional studies of the effects of depleted uranium in animals.

    - DoD has funded five toxicology projects that are investigating the health effects of DU in experimental animals (DoD-7A, DoD-7B, DoD-121, DoD-122, DoD-123). In particular, since 1994, the Armed Forces Radiobiology Research Institute (AFRRI) has been investigating the health effects of embedded DU pellets on rats. IOM cited the results of several published AFRRI studies. (IOM, 2000) For example, there was no detectable kidney toxicity in rats embedded with DU pellets, even at very high concentrations of urinary uranium. Also, in 2000, DoD released a Broad Agency Announcement to fund additional studies of health effects of heavy metals in experimental animals, including DU. Outcomes of particular interest include effects on the lung, liver, kidney, and nervous systems; and localized soft tissue responses of embedded fragments. Awards for these projects will occur in 2001.

IV.B.2. White House Report: Health Consequences of the Gulf War: An Ongoing Analysis

In mid-2000, White House staff charged the MVHCB with coordinating and editing an interagency report, which would summarize the activities of the Federal Government to address illnesses in Gulf War veterans. This report was completed in December 2000, and it was entitled Health Consequences of the Gulf War: An Ongoing Analysis. (White House, 2000) The White House released this report officially on January 16, 2001, and President Clinton signed the foreword. This report provides an overview of the background, clinical programs, research and investigations, compensation initiatives, outreach efforts, and lessons learned from the Federal efforts to understand the causes of the illnesses arising from the Gulf War.

The Military and Veterans Health Coordinating Board coordinated the planning and drafting of this document by staff of DoD, VA, and HHS. MVHCB staff edited the report and placed it on their Internet site, at http://www.mvhcb.gov/. The Office of the Special Assistant for Gulf War Illnesses funded the printing of 3,300 color copies of the report. It was distributed to all members of Congress, the White House, Veterans' Service Organizations, and Military Service Organizations.

The report includes a chapter on Research, which summarizes the findings, to date, on illnesses in Gulf War veterans. (White House, 2000) The major conclusions are:

- Military personnel who served in the Gulf War have had a significantly higher incidence of suffering one or more symptoms that include fatigue, memory loss, difficulty concentrating, pains in muscles and joints, and rashes.
- The symptoms range in severity from barely detectable to completely debilitating.
- Other symptoms are noted with reduced frequency, but still may be experienced more often by deployed than by non-deployed veterans.
- No single accepted diagnosis or group of diagnoses has been identified that describes and explains these symptoms.
- No single exposure, or set of exposures, has been shown conclusively to cause individual or combinations of symptoms.
- No diseases included in the international classification systems have been shown to be more frequent in the deployed or in non-deployed veterans with the exception of PTSD [posttraumatic stress disorder] symptoms.
- Deaths among deployed veterans are not higher in general than deaths among non-deployed veterans (through 1997).
- Deaths due to accidents are higher among veterans that deployed to the Gulf.

IV.B.3. 2001 Conference on Illnesses among Gulf War Veterans: A Decade of Scientific Research

The RWG organized and hosted an international meeting, entitled the "2001 Conference on Illnesses among Gulf War Veterans: A Decade of Scientific Research." It was held on January 24-26, 2001, in Alexandria, Virginia. The purpose of the meeting was to bring Federally sponsored researchers on Gulf War veterans' illnesses together in a common forum. This year's conference emphasized the current state of the science and lessons learned. Speakers were encouraged to place their new findings within the context of the implications of the research that has already been completed.

This was the fifth such conference. The first was held in Washington, DC, at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in 1995; the second in Fort Detrick, Maryland, in 1997; and the third and fourth in Arlington, Virginia, in 1998 and 1999. Since 1995, the conference has grown from about 50 participants to almost 400 scientists, clinicians, government officials, and veterans. The 2001 Conference included scientists from Great Britain, Canada, Australia, France, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Israel.

The objectives of the Conference were to bring Federally sponsored researchers together in a common forum to:

- Provide an opportunity for researchers to present and exchange study results.
- Learn from recognized experts about overarching research areas as they relate to the etiology, diagnosis, and treatment of Gulf War veterans' illnesses.
- Inform clinicians of current practices for the treatment of Gulf War veterans' illnesses, and the latest research findings and their potential impact on clinical care.
- Provide an opportunity for veterans and veterans groups to learn about ongoing research and to interact directly with researchers, clinicians, and Government officials.
- Provide an opportunity to inform executive and legislative branches of the Government about research and clinical initiatives related to the Gulf War that should be considered for future deployments.

REV_00137414

- Encourage communication, cooperation, and collaboration among researchers, clinicians, and veterans.
- Evaluate the implications of research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses: current state of the science and lessons learned.

Over the course of three days, the 2001 Conference was organized into three morning plenary sessions, two afternoon breakout sessions on specific research topics, and one evening poster session. In addition, there were two early morning and one afternoon clinical symposia addressing treatment and clinical management of Gulf War veterans' illnesses.

The plenary sessions were intended to be of broad appeal to a wide audience. Nationally and internationally recognized experts focused on four major themes: longitudinal follow-up studies of Gulf War veterans; alternate approaches to case definitions; results of neuropsychological testing; and research on potential exposures during the Gulf War. During the breakout sessions and the poster session, researchers presented their research findings in a wide range of scientific areas, including epidemiology, toxicology, psychology, neurology, neuropsychology, treatment, force health protection, and prevention.

The Proceedings for this conference were published in early 2001. (MVHCB, 2001b) The Proceedings contain the texts of the presentations provided by each plenary speaker, summaries of each breakout session, and a complete set of abstracts for each presentation in the breakout sessions and poster session. The section of the Proceedings, which contains the texts of the plenary sessions, has been reprinted as Appendix B of this Annual Report to Congress for 2000.

V. RESEARCH MANAGEMENT

A. Overview

Research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses is a complex undertaking, involving a number of different approaches. The Federal research effort on this problem involves scientists in Federal, academic, and private institutions, both in the United States and abroad, conducting research sponsored by VA, DoD, and HHS. Each of these Departments has distinct, though complementary, capabilities and capacities for conducting and sponsoring research on Gulf War veterans' health issues. In addition, each Department has its own appropriation for extramural and intramural general biomedical research programs.

The biomedical research programs in VA, DoD, and HHS have well-established management structures for science policy formulation and the solicitation, scientific peer review, and funding of both extramural and intramural programs. Each Department's research management hierarchy for Gulf War veterans' illnesses research has been linked through an overall coordinated effort carried out by the Research Working Group (RWG) of the Military and Veterans Health Coordinating Board (MVHCB). As an operational policy, the RWG works through the management authority that each Department maintains over its intramural scientists, its scientific program managers who are responsible for extramural research, and its budgets. However, the RWG has no budget authority itself, which ensures greater objectivity. As a consequence, all funds for research flow through the funding agency or Department.

B. Oversight of Research

Each Department engaged in research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses endorses the need for both prospective and retrospective scientific peer review of research. Review and oversight of research have been important, because of the urgency of the health concerns of Gulf War veterans and their families, and the diverse nature of the reported illnesses. VA, DoD, HHS, and the Executive Office of the President have established multiple oversight mechanisms to capture the full spectrum of the overall effort. Some oversight mechanisms are broad-based, encompassing all research issues, while others are more focused on individual research projects and programs.

Four of the most important oversight activities are briefly discussed below. Although each has had a broad mandate that has encompassed virtually all issues related to Gulf War veterans' illnesses, the discussion below will focus on their research oversight activities, findings, and recommendations.

1. Institute of Medicine/Medical Follow-up Agency: Health Consequences of Service During the Persian Gulf War

As directed by Public Law 102-585, VA and DoD jointly entered into a contract with the Medical Follow-Up Agency (MFUA) of the Institute of Medicine, National Academy of Sciences. The three-year IOM contract started on September 30, 1993. The IOM was mandated to review existing scientific, medical and other information on the health consequences of military service during the Gulf War. The IOM was also mandated to write a report that focused on the following:

- an assessment of the effectiveness of actions taken by the VA and DoD to collect and maintain information that is potentially useful for assessing the health consequences of military service in the Gulf War;
- recommendations on means of improving the collection and maintenance of such information; and
- recommendations on whether there is sound scientific basis for an epidemiological study or studies on the health consequences of service in the Gulf War, and the nature of such study or studies.

On January 4, 1995, the IOM issued a report, entitled Health Consequences of Service During the Persian Gulf War: Initial Findings and Recommendations for Action (IOM, 1995). In general, the IOM panel endorsed previous findings of the Defense Science Board (DSB, 1994) and a National Institutes of Health Technology Assessment Workshop (NIH, 1994) that no single disease entity could be identified for the health complaints expressed by Gulf War veterans. The panel also strongly emphasized the importance of population-based studies, which are currently ongoing in a number of areas.

The final IOM report of September 1996 stands as a separate document from its initial January 1995 report. It is entitled Health Consequences of Service During the Persian Gulf War: Recommendations for Research and Information Systems. (IOM, 1996) The IOM panel stated that it could find no scientific evidence to date demonstrating adverse health consequences associated with service in the Gulf War beyond the few documented cases of leishmaniasis, combat-related or injury-related mortality or morbidity, and increased risk of psychiatric sequelae of deployment. The panel went on to state that there is a strong likelihood that no single hypothesis could account for all illnesses reported by Gulf War veterans, whether or not they resulted from service in the Gulf War. Finally, the panel observed that after previous wars and conflicts, a proportion of military service personnel and veterans have had medical complaints of varying degrees of severity that are not explainable based on identifiable health hazards or physical illnesses. This observation echoes work by Hyams et al. (1996) tracing such a phenomenon back at least to the Civil War.

The IOM panel made the following research recommendations:

- Determine factors for possible response differences among active and non-active duty service members.
- Conduct mortality studies on Gulf War veterans out to at least 30 years.
- Determine the reason for excess deaths by external causes among Gulf War and other veterans.
- Continue and extend the Defense Medical Epidemiological Database.
- Refine geographical information systems (GIS) for troop locations and plan for future conflicts.
- Conduct reviews of the Total Exposure Assessment Methodology used to predict pollutant exposure in the Gulf War.
- Study gender issues when assessing health effects of deployment.
- Conduct studies on the consequences of assigning men and women to serve together.
- Complete and publish the Naval Health Research Center epidemiology studies.
- Complete and publish the VA National Survey of Persian Gulf Veterans.
- Complete evaluation of predictors of VA registry enrollment.
- Strengthen the epidemiologic capabilities of the armed forces.
- Submit all research (intra- and extramural) for peer review publication in a timely manner.

Each of these IOM recommendations has been implemented by VA, DoD, and HHS. The progress, to date, is summarized below, in Section VI. Research Priorities.

In accordance with P.L. 102-585, the agreement with IOM has been extended for the general purposes of providing core epidemiological support for research on military and veteran populations. This support provides a valuable infrastructure to carry out epidemiological research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. The Medical Follow-up Agency of the IOM is currently conducting a number of related projects (DoD-69, DoD-93, DoD-116/VA-63, and DoD-117).

2. Executive Office of the President: Presidential Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses (PAC)

The President established the PAC by Executive Order on May 26, 1995. Between August 1995 and January 1997, the Committee met a total of 23 times either as a full Committee or in subcommittees. The 12 member committee was composed of scientists, health care professionals, veterans, and policy experts. The Committee was charged with reviewing and providing recommendations on the full range of activities relating to the government's response to Gulf War veterans' illnesses. In addition the Committee evaluated the available data on the nature of Gulf War veterans' illnesses and on potential health effects related to Gulf War risk factors.

The Committee released an interim report in February 1996 (PAC, 1996a). Although the Interim Report stated that VA, DoD, and HHS research programs were generally well-designed and should lead to meaningful answers to issues concerning Gulf War veterans-related health issues, it also had several recommendations. The Committee's recommendations covered issues such as peer review, coordination of agency research activities, the use of public advisory committees, and the availability of information on troop exposures. The Committee made no findings about specific illnesses or risk factors in the Interim Report. In response to the Interim Report, the Departments developed a coordinated plan of action that responded to the Advisory Committee's interim recommendations.

The Final Report of the Committee was released in December 1996 (PAC, 1996b). The PAC came to the following conclusions:

- Many veterans have illnesses likely to be connected to service in the Gulf War.

- Current scientific evidence does not support a causal link between the symptoms and illnesses reported today by Gulf War veterans and exposures while in the Gulf to:

  Pesticides
  Chemical warfare agents
  Biological warfare agents
  Vaccines
  Pyridostigmine bromide
  Infectious diseases
  Depleted uranium
  Oil well fires and smoke
  Petroleum products

The Final Report also concluded that stress (known to affect the brain, immune system, cardiovascular system, and various hormonal responses) is likely to be an important contributing factor to Gulf War veterans' illnesses.

The Final Report made the following research recommendations:

- Require any new large-scale epidemiologic studies to have scientific and public advisory committees.
- Develop more accurate and reliable troop locator systems.
- Plan and conduct further research on low-level exposure to organophosphate chemical warfare nerve agents.
- Monitor Gulf War veterans for increased rates of cancer through mortality studies.
- Conduct research on the health status of individuals with embedded depleted uranium fragments.
- Collect and archive serum samples from U.S. service personnel when feasible.
- Conduct basic and clinical research on the physiologic effects of stress and stress-related disorders.
- The Research Working Group should consult more thoroughly with other Federal agencies.

Each of these PAC recommendations has been implemented by VA, DoD, and HHS. The progress, to date, is summarized below, in Section VI. Research Priorities.

Because of concern over the adequacy of investigations into reports of possible chemical and biological warfare exposure incidents during the Gulf War, and because of a need to follow up on recommendations from the Committee's Final Report, the President extended the Committee through October 1997. At that time the PAC issued a Special Report (PAC, 1997). In the Special Report the Committee did not alter its findings and conclusions with respect to potential causes of Gulf War veterans' illnesses. The Special Report did not contain any specific recommendations for research.

With respect to Federally funded research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses, the PAC concluded that the Government has been adequately and appropriately responding to its recommendations. (PAC, 1997) The PAC particularly commended the Government for its new initiatives targeted on health effects of low-level exposure to chemical warfare (CW) agents. As the PAC noted in its Final Report, "the amount of data from either human or animal research on low-level exposures [to CW agents] is minimal." However, in its Special Report, the PAC concluded that planned research on the health effects of low-level exposure might address any uncertainties and inconclusiveness identified in the Final Report.

The PAC approved of the government's targeted solicitations for research and the process used to make such awards. (PAC, 1997) However, the Committee expressed reservations about a perceived deficiency in processes for funding some research projects related to Gulf War veterans' illnesses. The Committee noted that "competition and external peer review of research proposals are essential to guarantee scientific merit, relevance, and level of priority generally." The Committee acknowledged that benefit can accrue from small-scale, short-term funding on a sole source basis for pilot projects or to address narrow scientific questions. The Committee stated, though, that such approaches should be rare and that protocols still should be peer reviewed prior to funding, limited in the amount of funds released, and not subject to renewal without competition.

The RWG of the MVHCB will continue to endorse peer review and competition as the means of obtaining the best research products.

3. Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs: Report of the Special Investigation Unit on Gulf War Illnesses

The Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs undertook a year-long investigation in 1997, and published a comprehensive report in 1998. (SVAC, 1998) The Special Investigative Unit (SIU) examined the policies and actions of the U.S. government that have had an impact on the current health of Gulf War veterans.

Specific areas of concern were encompassed: the DoD's plans and policies; the intelligence community's role; health risks encountered by U.S. troops during the war; record keeping before, during, and after it; and the VA's accountability to and responsibilities for Gulf War veterans.

The major conclusions of the SVAC related to research were:

- While there does not appear to be any single "Gulf War Syndrome," there is a constellation of symptoms and illnesses whose cause or causes eludes explanation at this time.
- There is a great need to monitor those veterans who are ill, or who may become ill in the future, to assess whether they are getting better or worse and to define better the long-term effects they may experience.
- There is insufficient evidence to prove or disprove that there was an actual low-level exposure of any troops to chemical weapon nerve agents, or that any of the health effects some veterans are experiencing were caused by such exposure.
- In the inherently difficult area of military health, research that is conducted before illnesses occur, not after the fact, can help to assure prompt, effective medical treatment; to prevent adverse health effects in the first place; and to provide clear information to veterans who may be adversely affects by such exposures.

The SVAC made the following research recommendations:

- DoD should fund research into the health effects of depleted uranium exposure.
- DoD should establish a program to improve the capacity for rapid and early detection of exposures that may affect troop health during and after deployments; for example to develop technology to rapidly screen persons exposed to a wide range of chemical toxins, including chemical warfare agents.
- DoD and VA should monitor the treatment provided to ill Gulf War veterans on an ongoing basis, especially those with unexplained illnesses, to determine whether those veterans are getting better or worse over time.
- DoD and VA should implement methods to monitor the health status of Gulf War veterans over time to provide early detection of future illnesses that may emerge years later, such as higher rates of cancer.
- DoD and VA should establish a birth defects registry for military service members to gather statistics on possible reproductive health effects stemming from battlefield exposures.
- DoD and VA should evaluate treatment protocols that have been useful for persons in the general population who suffer from illnesses similar to Gulf War veterans' unexplained illnesses, and they should fund appropriate clinical programs and research in this area.
- DoD and VA should fund Gulf War health research only through an impartial, scientific peer review process, except in the case of the most serious circumstances.

Each of the SVAC recommendations has been implemented by DoD and VA. The progress, to date, is summarized below, in Section VI. Research Priorities.

4. Presidential Special Oversight Board: Final Report of Special Oversight Board for Department of Defense Investigations of Gulf War Chemical and Biological Incidents

The Presidential Special Oversight Board (PSOB) was established in June 1998 in response to a recommendation of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses. (PAC, 1997) The Final Report of the PSOB was published on December 20, 2000. (PSOB, 2000)

The PSOB charter called for it to "provide advice and recommendations [and oversight] . . . of DoD investigations into possible detections of, and exposures to, chemical or biological warfare agents and environmental and other factors that may have contributed to Gulf War Illnesses . . . [and to provide an] overall evaluation of DoD's plan for and progress toward the implementation of the Presidential Advisory Committee's recommendations contained in its Special Report." (PSOB, 2000)

There were a limited number of research conclusions and recommendations in this report, which were scattered in the report, rather than clustered in a summary. (PSOB, 2000) Most of the report was not directly related to research, since most of the report focused on an evaluation of the work of the DoD Office of the Special Assistant for Gulf War Illnesses (OSAGWI).

The major conclusions related to research in the PSOB Final Report were:

- "After every deployment of troops for war, similar symptoms have occurred in returning service personnel. This 'post-war syndrome' has been attributed to the stresses of deployment. It has been described in various ways in every war since the Civil War. . . The Board concludes that it is highly likely that a proportion of Gulf War veterans suffering from the symptoms of undiagnosed illnesses fall into the generalized category of 'post-war syndrome' or post deployment illness. As with all previous wars, stressful deployments to a combat zone can create significant medical problems for returning troops." (pages 44-45)

- "Mental disorders clearly affect military readiness. These factors are the second leading cause of hospitalization, the leading cause of inpatient bed days, and the leading medical cause of attrition from the military service. Mental disorders are also the most important cause of medical and occupational morbidity among active duty US military personnel." (page 72)

- "The only known potential exposure of US personnel to chemical warfare agents remains the accidental low-level release of nerve agents during demolition operations at Khamisiyah, Iraq, in March 1991." (page ii)

- "Based on the current body of evidence in the medical literature on studies of humans accidentally exposed to organophosphate nerve agents and on controlled animal exposures to organophosphate nerve agents at levels causing no acute signs or symptoms, low-level exposures do not produce chronic illnesses. However, gaps exist in the scientific literature regarding the potential long-term health consequences of exposure to low concentrations of nerve agents that are initially asymptomatic." (pages 48-49)

- "The Board concludes that DU [depleted uranium] is unlikely to be the cause of either the unexplained illnesses among Gulf War veterans or the diagnosed illnesses found during CCEP and VA Registry evaluations." (page 51)

- "The Board concurs with both the RAND study on PB [pyridostigmine bromide] and the Institute of Medicine analysis that 'available evidence is of insufficient quality, consistency or statistical power to permit a conclusion regarding the presence or absence of an association [of PB use with adverse health effects] in humans.' " (page 55)

In its Final Report, the PSOB made the following research recommendations:

- "The Board concludes that stress is likely a primary cause of illness in at least some Gulf War veterans; it is a likely secondary factor in potentiating other causes of undiagnosed illnesses among some Gulf War veterans. . . This issue requires continued research. The Board commends DoD for recognizing the role of stress in deployment and in combat and for developing and implementing programs to address this issue." (page iv)

- "The Board recommends that OSAGWI and the MVHCB closely monitor the development and resourcing of DoD's research on the health effects of low-level CWA [chemical warfare agent] exposures and make recommendations as appropriate to ensure continued progress in this area." (page vii)

- "The Board strongly believes that efforts to fund non-peer reviewed research projects do not serve the best interest of the nation or of its Gulf War veterans. Researchers and clinicians who advocate 'alternative' diagnostic and treatment methods, as well as those proposing more conventional approaches, should be encouraged to respond to Requests for Proposal and Broad Agency Announcements with well-constructed proposals capable of passing vigorous and independent peer review." (page viii)

- "The Board believes that DoD should fully support the Millennium Cohort Study and that the service members selected to participate in the program should cooperate fully. This twenty-year research project will significantly enhance the Federal Government's and the medical community's understanding of the long-term health consequences of military service and facilitate improved clinical care and force health protection for members of the Armed Forces." (page ix)

- "The Board concurs with the Institute of Medicine recommendations for: '1) additional studies in experimental animals to investigate the specific effects of DU; and 2) long-term follow-up of veterans exposed [and potentially exposed] to DU, including. . . [those] involved in clean-up operations or radiation control units.' " (page 51)

- "Further study is clearly needed in this area [pyridostigmine bromide], since PB remains the only viable prophylactic agent for soman exposure, and DoD intends to continue its use in future conflicts." (page 55)

- "PRD-5 recommended DoD possess the capability to collect and assess data associated with anticipated exposures during deployments and to respond to newly identified threats. . . The Board believes that the complexity of accurate assessment tools and epidemiological standards have inhibited progress in this area of environmental health research. The Board recommends that DoD develop and implement a system for applied toxicological research based on prioritized lists of environmental and occupational substances, as suggested in PRD-5." (page 74)

Each of the PSOB recommendations has been implemented by DoD and VA. The progress, to date, is summarized below, in Section VI. Research Priorities.

5. Other Oversight

In addition to the broad oversight that has been provided by the four committees cited above, there are several standing and special committees responsible for oversight on individual research projects and programs. The RWG also continues to encourage that all large epidemiological studies establish public advisory groups that include representation of Gulf War veterans. Additionally, valuable review and oversight has been provided by the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs, the House Committee on Government Reform, and the General Accounting Office.

C. Research Coordination

In 1993, VA, DoD, and HHS recognized the importance of a coordinated approach to research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses and formed the "Persian Gulf Interagency Research Coordinating Council." In January 1994, the Secretaries of VA, DoD, and HHS formed the Persian Gulf Veterans Coordinating Board. The Research Coordinating Council became the Research Working Group (RWG), operating under the auspices of the Coordinating Board. In 2000, the mission of the RWG broadened to include issues of Force Health Protection, as the PGVCB transitioned to become the MVHCB. (PGVCB, 2001) Membership on the RWG consists of senior research scientists and clinical managers from VA, DoD, and HHS.

The RWG includes various subcommittees that have been in existence over the past several years. The Planning Subcommittee for Annual Meetings of Federal Researchers has been responsible for organizing five meetings of Federally funded researchers. These meetings have provided an opportunity for researchers to gather and share recent research results and to discuss research problems of mutual interest. The 2001 conference was an open meeting allowing for extensive interactions among researchers, clinicians, veterans, and other members of the public.

The RWG reevaluated its general functions in September 2000, when the PGVCB transitioned to the MVHCB. The consensus statement on general functions is:

- The Research Working Group will provide coordination of the interagency research strategy, related to deployment health and health risk communication initiatives, affecting military personnel, veterans, and their families. It will:

    1. Assess the state and direction of research to identify new ideas or new research approaches, to identify gaps in scientific knowledge, and to make recommendations regarding research priorities.

    2. Promote and encourage appropriate scientific review of research sponsored by the Federal government.

    3. Make recommendations concerning appropriate actions and responses to research findings.

    4. Provide a forum for information exchange about research initiatives and priorities among the Departments of Defense, Veterans Affairs, and Health and Human Services, and the national and international research community.

Programmatic Review of Extramural Research Proposals

An important function of the RWG is programmatic review of research proposals that have been competitively reviewed and recommendation to funding agencies. Figure V-1. illustrates the general approach the RWG has taken regarding extramural research (research funded by an agency, but carried out by organizations outside of the agency such as universities, private laboratories, or other independent organizations). The RWG works collectively with VA, DoD, and HHS to establish research needs and identify agency-specific funding mechanisms to support that research. For a specific research funding activity, the responsible funding agency works in coordination with the RWG to develop a targeted solicitation for research.

Proposals that are submitted to the funding agency in response to a solicitation are scientifically peer reviewed using agency-specific peer review programs. For example, the Department of the Army in DoD uses a contract with the American Institute of Biological Sciences. Abstracts of peer reviewed proposals, summaries of the reviews of the peer reviewers, and the scientific merit scores assigned by the peer reviewers, are provided to a subcommittee of the RWG charged with providing secondary review of proposals for relevance. Relevance determinations are guided by interagency programmatic needs articulated through the RWG process and reflected in the Working Plan for Research (1996b). In its secondary review, the RWG may re-rank proposals based on relevance, but it will not recommend funding for any non-meritorious proposal, regardless of relevance or availability of funds. The RWG has no budget authority; therefore all final funding decisions about research are made by the individual agencies.

Though scientists within intramural research programs do not compete for their funding in the same way as non-federal extramural scientists, the RWG works with agencies to ensure that intramural programs and projects are adequately peer reviewed. The RWG will continue to work diligently to foster the highest standards of competition and peer review for all research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses.

Notable among the activities of the RWG are:

- Development, production, and dissemination of the 1995 A Working Plan for Research on Persian Gulf Veterans' Illness (PGVCB, 1995b), and its 1996 revision (PGVCB, 1996b).

- Production and dissemination of Annual Reports to Congress for 1994 through 2000 on results, status, and priorities of Federal research activities (PGVCB, 1995a; 1996a; 1997; 1998a; 1999a; 2001; MVHCB, 2001a).

REV_00137422

- Secondary programmatic review of research proposals that have been competitively reviewed by funding agencies.

- Organization of five conferences of Federally funded researchers, including publication of three Proceedings (PGVCB, 1998b; PGVCB, 1999b; MVHCB, 2001b).

- Coordination and oversight of implementation of relevant recommendations of the Institute of Medicine, Presidential Advisory Committee, Senate Veterans Affairs' Committee, the Presidential Review Directive 5, and the Presidential Special Oversight Board (IOM, 1995, 1996; PAC, 1996a, 1996b, 1997; SVAC, 1998; NSTC, 1998; PSOB, 2000).

- Two national treatment trials (exercise/behavior trial and antibiotic treatment trial).

- Organization of an international symposium in 1997, in conjunction with the Society of Toxicology on the health effects of low-level exposure to chemical warfare nerve agents.

- Development of a strategy for research on the health effects of exposure to low-levels of chemical warfare nerve agents.

- Follow-up investigation of preliminary reports of positive experimental serological tests for leishmaniasis in Gulf War veterans.

VI. RESEARCH PRIORITIES

The Research Working Group has identified the three sets of research priorities in 1995, 1996, and 1998. (PGVCB, 1995b; 1996b; 1999a) Substantial progress has been made on each of these priorities, which is summarized here.

A. RESEARCH PRIORITIES FOR 1995

In 1995, the scope and magnitude of the research activities required implementation of a comprehensive plan. This resulted in the publication of A Working Plan for Research on Persian Gulf Veterans' Illnesses on August 5, 1995. (PGVCB, 1995b) The Working Plan was coordinated by the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA), in conjunction with the PGVCB. The plan mapped out the course to pursue the following overarching goals:

- Establish the nature and prevalence of symptoms, diagnosable illnesses, and unexplained conditions among Persian Gulf veterans in comparison to appropriate control groups.

- Identify the possible risk factors for any illnesses, beyond those expected to occur, among Persian Gulf veterans.

- Identify appropriate diagnostic tools, treatment methods, and prevention strategies for any excess illness conditions found among Persian Gulf veterans.

A key component of the 1995 Working Plan was an assessment of current knowledge and research on Gulf War veterans' illnesses. This assessment led to the identification of 19 research questions, which are included below, in the section on research priorities for 1996.

This assessment also led to the identification of the following issues for which significant gaps in knowledge existed in 1995:

1. Information on the prevalence of symptoms, illnesses, and/or diseases within other coalition forces.
2. Information on the prevalence of symptoms, illnesses, and/or diseases within indigenous populations within the Persian Gulf area including Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.
3. Information on the prevalence of adverse reproductive outcomes among Persian Gulf veterans and their spouses.
4. Simple and sensitive tests for L. tropica infection that could lead to quantification of the prevalence of L. tropica infection among Persian Gulf veterans.
5. Information on the long-term, cause-specific mortality among Persian Gulf veterans.

Each of these research issues has been addressed since 1995, as follows:

1. The US government has coordinated its research effort with the UK and Canada, as coalition partners in the Gulf War. The UK fielded the second largest force during the Gulf War, including 53,000 service members. The US DoD has funded epidemiological research in the UK, which has compared the health of British Gulf War veterans, Bosnia veterans, and non-deployed veterans (projects DoD-39 and DoD-106). The results of the first phase of the British investigation have been published. (Unwin, et al, 1999; Ismail, et al, 1999; Ismail, et al, 2000; Hotopf, et al, 2000) The Canadian government has published a comprehensive study of the health of Canadian Gulf War veterans, compared to non-deployed veterans. (Goss Gilroy, et al, 1998) Denmark also participated in the Gulf War as a coalition partner, primarily in the postwar period after April 1991. American scientists are collaborating with researchers in Denmark on a study of neuropsychological function in Danish soldiers (project HHS-5).

2. Because the health status of Saudi Arabian soldiers has not been systematically addressed, a team of US researchers from DoD and CDC started an epidemiology study of the Saudi Arabian National Guard in 1999 (DoD-102). The objective is to examine available computerized databases for unusual health trends, comparing soldiers who were stationed in a combat area in January 1991 (Al Khafji), with soldiers who were stationed in a non-combat area (Riyadh). Mortality rates will be compared, as will rates and causes of hospitalizations and outpatient visits.

3. Eight projects include research objectives related to the prevalence of adverse reproductive outcomes among Gulf War veterans and their spouses. Three of these projects have been completed (HHS-4, DoD-1C, DoD-1G), and their results have been published. (Penman and Tarver, 1996; Cowan, et al, 1997; Araneta, et al, 1997; Araneta, et al, 2000) Five of these projects were completed recently, but have not published results yet (VA-2, VA-47, DoD-1D, DoD-35, and DoD-44).

4. Eight projects have focused on the development of simple, sensitive tests for leishmaniasis that could lead to quantification of the prevalence of infection, as well as new treatment methods. Six of these projects have been completed and have led to several publications (VA-6E, VA-16, DoD-8A, DoD-8B, DoD-9, and DoD-38). Two of these projects are ongoing (VA-15 and DoD-95).

5. The long-term mortality of Gulf War veterans will be followed by the VA for many years (project VA-1). Four publications have focused on the causes of mortality among American Gulf War veterans, compared to non-deployed veterans. (Helmkamp, 1994; Writer, et al, 1996; Kang and Bullman, 1996; Kang and Bullman, 2001) The major finding was that there was an increased mortality risk due to external causes (e.g., motor vehicle accidents) among Gulf War veterans. The British recently published a mortality study of Gulf War veterans and non-deployed veterans in the UK, and they demonstrated very similar results. (Macfarlane, et al, 2000)

B. RESEARCH PRIORITIES FOR 1996

In 1995 and 1996, the number of research programs investigating Gulf War veterans' illnesses increased substantially. Many research programs began to produce results. One major development in 1996 was the information about potential exposures to chemical weapons due to the demolitions at Khamisiyah. The addition of new research, results of ongoing research, and new information about potential exposures formed the basis of a new assessment of knowledge and research. This changed the context in which the research was conducted and necessitated a revision of the 1995 Working Plan. The 1996 report was entitled A Working Plan for Research on Persian Gulf Veterans' Illnesses, First Revision. (PGVCB, 1996b) This report identified three sets of research objectives: a) shorter-term objectives; b) long-term objectives; and c) a comprehensive list of 21 research questions.

a. Short-Term Objectives

Emerging findings from ongoing research in 1995 and 1996, and new factual information on the potential for chemical weapons exposure in southern Iraq in 1991 led to the following specific, near-term recommendations for additional research:

1. More longitudinal follow-up studies of the health of Persian Gulf veterans, including those with illnesses that are difficult to diagnose.
2. Critical peer review of models used to predict exposure concentrations of environmental pollution (such as the Kuwait oil well fires) and chemical warfare agents (such as the demolition of weapons storage sites at Khamisiyah in March 1991, and aerial bombing of chemical weapons facilities during the air war).
3. Assessment of the potential for clinical investigations of the health status of the service members in the vicinity of Khamisiyah when weapons bunker 73 and the storage pit were detonated in March 1991. If deemed possible, such clinical investigations should be carried out.

Each of these research issues has been addressed since 1996, as follows:

1. Five studies include longitudinal follow-up of Gulf War veterans, in Boston, New Orleans, New Jersey, Iowa, and the United Kingdom. These studies were described in detail in Section IV.C.4. of the Annual Report for 1999. (PGVCB, 2001)

2. Several publications have described the results of models of the oil well fire smoke and potential releases of chemical weapons, all of which have been peer reviewed. The modeling of environmental pollution released by the Kuwaiti oil well fires has been described in detail. (Office of the Special Assistant for Gulf War Illnesses (OSAGWI), 1998b; Spektor, 1998; OSAGWI, 2000b; OSAGWI, 2000c) The results of modeling of the potential release of chemical weapons, due to the demolitions at Khamisiyah in March 1991, have been reported by two agencies. (OSAGWI, 1997; CIA, 1997; OSAGWI, 2000f) The results of modeling of the potential release of chemical weapons, due to aerial bombing of facilities during the air war, have also been published by two agencies. (CIA, 1996; OSAGWI, 2000e) Only three sites that were bombed during the air war might have released chemical weapons-Muhammadiyat, Al Muthanna, and Ukhaydir. (OSAGWI, 2001b; OSAGWI, 2001f; OSAGWI, 2001e) The results of investigations about potential exposure of US troops to the oil well fires and to chemical weapons are summarized in Appendix C. of this Annual Report to Congress for 2000.

3. Three funded investigations are focusing on the potential health effects among service members who were near Khamisiyah at the time of the demolitions in 1991 (DoD-1B, DoD-63, and DoD-69). One of these studies (DoD-1B) is complete and published. (Gray, et al, 1999c) In addition to these three funded projects focusing on Khamisiyah, there are three related studies that are outgrowths of other projects, which evaluate mortality rates, clinical diagnoses, and self-reported symptoms (VA-1, DoD-94, and VA-4). The mortality study is complete and published. (Kang and Bullman, 2001)

b. Long Term-Objectives

Additional research on health-related issues arising from the Gulf War experience, but with potential for more general applicability to future conflicts, was also recommended in 1996, including:

1. Investigation of the risk factors for the development of stress-related disorders including, but not limited to, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD).
2. Investigation of the risk factors responsible for the observed excess mortality due to external causes (e.g., motor vehicle accidents) in veterans of all wars and conflicts.
3. Exploration of the development of practical, sensitive, and specific biomarkers of exposure to chemical agents, including organophosphate nerve agents and vesicants such as sulfur mustard.
4. Toxicological and, where feasible, epidemiological research on the potential for long-term health effects resulting from low-level, sub-clinical exposures to chemical agents, particularly organophosphate agents such as sarin.
5. Development of a strategic plan for research into the potential long-term health consequences of exposure to low-levels of chemical warfare agents.

Each of these research issues has been addressed since 1996, as follows:

1. Many projects are focusing on the risk factors for the development of stress-related disorders, including post-traumatic stress disorder and major depression. Several studies that focused on stress-related disorders were published in 2000. (Benotsch, et al, 2000; Engel, et al, 2000; Fiedler, et al, 2000; Ismail, et al, 2000; King, et al, 2000; Nisenbaum, et al, 2000; Sharkansky, et al, 2000; Storzbach, et al, 2000; Wagner, et al 2000)

2. An increased risk for mortality due to external causes has been observed in veterans of both the Vietnam War and the Gulf War. One project is evaluating the risk factors responsible for the observed increase in mortality due to motor vehicle accidents in Gulf War veterans (DoD-102). Another project is evaluating the risk factors for the significantly increased risk for unintentional injuries in Gulf War veterans (DoD-73). This project resulted in an important epidemiologic report in 2000. (Bell, et al, 2000)

3. Three projects are focusing on the development of sensitive, specific biomarkers of exposure to chemical agents, including organophosphate nerve agents and vesicants such as sulfur mustard (VA-6D, VA-47, and DoD-49). Several studies related to sarin and mustard agent have been published.

4. Fifteen toxicological projects are focusing on the potential long-term health effects resulting from low-level, subclinical exposures to chemical agents. Nine of these projects are focusing on sarin. Seven epidemiological research projects are focusing on the potential long-term health effects resulting from low-level, subclinical nerve agent exposures. Six projects are focusing on possible sarin exposures due to the demolitions at Khamisiyah. (DoD-1B, DoD-63, DoD-69, DoD-94, VA-1, and VA-4) One project is evaluating the long-term effects of sarin and other nerve agents on volunteers who participated in experiments at Aberdeen Proving Grounds in the 1950s to 1970s (DoD-93).

5. A strategic research plan was developed, entitled "Effects of Low-Level Exposure to Chemical Warfare Agents: A Research Strategy." An interagency committee wrote it, including members from VA, DoD, CDC, and the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). It was published in the Annual Report to Congress for 1997. (PGVCB, 1998a)

c. Comprehensive List of 21 Research Questions

In 1995, it was recommended that a contextual framework be provided for the results of completed and ongoing studies, to develop an approach for the interpretation of research results. In 1995, the Research Working Group identified 19 major research questions, to which two additional questions were added in 1996. (PGVCB, 1996b) The comprehensive Gulf War research portfolio has addressed each of these 21 questions, and relevant results have been published on each one. A comprehensive assessment of the progress made on each of these 21 questions is provided in Appendix C of this Annual Report to Congress for 2000.

21 Research Questions Highlighted in the 1996 A Working Plan for Research

1. WHAT IS THE PREVALENCE OF SYMPTOMS/ILLNESSES IN THE PERSIAN GULF VETERAN POPULATION? HOW DOES THIS PREVALENCE COMPARE TO THAT IN AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL GROUP?

2. WHAT WAS THE OVERALL EXPOSURE OF TROOPS TO LEISHMANIA TROPICA?

3. WHAT WERE THE EXPOSURE CONCENTRATIONS TO VARIOUS PETROLEUM PRODUCTS, AND THEIR COMBUSTION PRODUCTS, IN TYPICAL USAGE DURING THE PERSIAN GULF CONFLICT?

4. WHAT WAS THE EXTENT OF EXPOSURE TO SPECIFIC OCCUPATIONAL/ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS KNOWN TO BE COMMON IN THE PERSIAN GULF VETERANS EXPERIENCE? WAS THIS EXPOSURE DIFFERENT FROM THAT OF AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL GROUP?

5. WHAT WERE THE POTENTIAL EXPOSURES OF TROOPS TO ORGANOPHOSPHORUS NERVE AGENT AND/OR SULFUR MUSTARD AS A RESULT OF ALLIED BOMBING AT MUHAMMADIYAT AND AL MUTHANNA, OR THE DEMOLITION OF A WEAPONS BUNKER AT KHAMISIYAH?

6. WHAT WAS THE EXTENT OF EXPOSURE TO CHEMICAL AGENT, OTHER THAN AT KHAMISIYAH, IRAQ, IN THE PERSIAN GULF AS A FUNCTION OF SPACE AND TIME?

7. WHAT WAS THE PREVALENCE OF PB USE AMONG PERSIAN GULF TROOPS?

8. WHAT WAS THE PREVALENCE OF VARIOUS PSYCHOPHYSIOLOGICAL STRESSORS AMONG GULF WAR VETERANS? IS THE PREVALENCE DIFFERENT FROM THAT OF AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL POPULATION?

9. ARE PERSIAN GULF VETERANS MORE LIKELY THAN AN APPROPRIATE COMPARISON GROUP TO EXPERIENCE NON-SPECIFIC SYMPTOMS AND SYMPTOM COMPLEXES?

10. DO PERSIAN GULF VETERANS HAVE A GREATER PREVALENCE OF ALTERED IMMUNE FUNCTION OR HOST DEFENSE WHEN COMPARED WITH AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL GROUP?

11. IS THERE A GREATER PREVALENCE OF BIRTH DEFECTS IN THE OFFSPRING OF PERSIAN GULF VETERANS THAN IN AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL POPULATION?

12. HAVE PERSIAN GULF VETERANS EXPERIENCED LOWER REPRODUCTIVE SUCCESS THAN AN APPROPRIATE CONTROL POPULATION?

13. IS THE PREVALENCE OF SEXUAL DYSFUNCTION GREATER AMONG PERSIAN GULF VETERANS THAN AMONG AN APPROPRIATE COMPARISON POPULATION?

REV_00137427

14. Do Gulf War veterans report more pulmonary symptoms, or diagnoses, than persons in appropriate control groups?

15. Do Gulf War veterans have a smaller baseline lung function in comparison to an appropriate control group? Do Gulf War veterans have a greater degree of non-specific airway reactivity in comparison to an appropriate control group?

16. Is there a greater prevalence of organic neuropsychological and Neurological deficits in Persian Gulf Veterans compared to appropriate control populations?

17. can short-term, low-level exposures to pyridostigmine bromide, the insect repellant DEET, and the insecticide permethrin, alone or in combination, cause short-term and/or long-term neurological effects?

18. Do Persian Gulf veterans have a significantly higher prevalence of psychological symptoms and/or diagnoses than do members of an appropriate control group?

19. What is the prevalence of leismaniasis and other infectious diseases in the Gulf War veteran population?

20. Do Gulf War veterans have a greater risk of developing cancers of any type when compared with an appropriate control population?

21. Are Gulf War veterans experiencing a higher mortality rate than that of an appropriate control population? Are specific causes of death related to service in the Persian Gulf region?

C. RESEARCH PRIORITIES FOR 1998

During 1998, the RWG reevaluated the issue of research priorities. (PGVCB, 1999a) Key factors that guided the RWG in it discussions were recent research findings, the current breadth and depth of the research portfolio in key areas, and the availability of resources to develop needed new initiatives.

1. Research on Treatments for Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses

Some Gulf War veterans with unexplained illnesses are suffering from a complex of symptoms such as fatigue, musculoskeletal pain, and cognitive problems. These symptom complexes significantly overlap with other symptom complexes identified in the civilian population such as chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS) and fibromyalgia (FM). As with illnesses in Gulf War veterans, no clearly defined etiologic agent has been identified for CFS and FM.

The RWG determined that experimental treatment methods that have been applied to persons with CFS or FM deserved further exploration in the context of Gulf War veterans' illnesses. Consequently, the RWG established the development of treatment protocols for unexplained illnesses as a research priority. In 1999, VA and DoD began two major multi-site treatment trials. These are the Exercise Behavioral Therapy Trial (VA-62 and DoD-115) and the Antibiotic Treatment Trial (VA-55 and DoD-119). Details of these two trials were provided in Section IV.C.1. of the Annual Report for 1999. (PGVCB, 2001) Total investment by VA and DoD for these two trials is more than $9.6 million and $5.2 million, respectively. These treatment trials will be completed in 2002.

In addition, VA has funded an Institute of Medicine study to identify effective treatments for health problems in Gulf War veterans. This 18-month study started in 1999 and it was described in some detail in section IV.B.2. of the Annual Report for 1999. (PGVCB, 2001) This project will be published in 2001.

2. Longitudinal Follow-Up for Gulf War Veterans' Illnesses

The RWG has concluded that research approaches to determine the long-term health of veterans are a high priority. Several research projects funded by the Federal Government have longitudinal components built into them. These projects are directed toward understanding the progress of Gulf War veterans' illnesses over time. In 2000, there are five studies that include longitudinal follow-up, in Boston, New Orleans,

REV_00137428

East Orange, New Jersey, Iowa, and the United Kingdom. These studies were described in detail in Section IV.C.4. of the Annual Report for 1999. (PGVCB, 2001) Preliminary results of these follow-up studies were presented at the 2001 Conference on Illnesses among Gulf War Veterans: A Decade of Scientific Research. (MVHCB, 2001b) The abstracts for these presentations are included in Appendix B.

3. Disease Prevention

The substantial proportion of veterans who have reported ill health following deployment to the Gulf War represents a significant level of morbidity that might be preventable. To ensure that future health problems in future deployments can be prevented, the RWG has endorsed future research aimed generally at disease prevention, and more specifically at prevention of stress-related symptoms and conditions. As a result of RWG recommendations in the past, the Federal investment focusing on the pathophysiology of stress-related illnesses has markedly increased. There are currently approximately 75 projects with a primary or secondary focus on the Brain and Nervous System. With this investment in better understanding of the pathophysiology of stress-related illnesses, it is also appropriate to initiate research that can take advantage of new findings and how they might lead to better disease prevention and treatment.

4. Improved Hazard Assessment

The Presidential Review Directive-5 recognized that the ability to better anticipate environmental and occupational hazards prior to deployments could potentially reduce morbidity associated with unintended or unanticipated exposures. (NSTC, 1998) The RWG, in conjunction with the Working Groups that developed the PRD-5, recommended enhanced research efforts aimed at improving methods of hazard identification and risk assessment for environmental and occupational hazards. Such research efforts should emphasize the reality of complex multiple exposures to more than one hazardous agent.

In 1998, the DoD established new funding for programmed research. The purpose of this program element funding, explicitly put into DoD's budget requests, was to address issues of Gulf War veterans' illnesses, which may also be of concern in future deployments. The funding is approximately $20 million per year for fiscal years 1999 to 2002, and about $5 million per year thereafter. The overall objective is to enhance force health protection in future deployments. The program is guided by a tri-service DoD panel and is coordinated with the RWG. Specific research thrust areas in 1999 and 2000 have included:

1. prevention and treatment of persistent stress symptoms;
2. methods to assess health hazards from toxic chemicals and mixtures and to monitor exposures;
3. improved safety assessments of medical materiel, including potential interactions in operational environments;
4. epidemiological studies to continue long-term follow-up of Gulf War veterans and to improve health status monitoring in future deployments; and
5. improved and accelerated research on leishmaniasis prevention, diagnosis, and treatment.

Senate Panel Oks 5 Bush Nominees; Leahy Seeks Action on Judicial Picks

REV_00137476

By Audrey Hudson
The Washington Times
Thursday, December 6, 2001

A Senate panel yesterday approved five of President Bush's judicial nominees and eased bitter feuding between Democrats and Republicans over the backlogged process.

Mr. Bush has submitted 64 district and circuit court nominees to the Senate for confirmation - a record number of first-year nominations over the past three administrations.

However, the Democrat-controlled Senate has confirmed only 18 judges - a confirmation rate of 28 percent - angering Republicans who have used myriad procedural tactics to push confirmations.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, Judiciary Committee chairman, has asked Senate leaders to expedite confirmation of the five approved yesterday, plus nine nominees approved last week. That would bring the confirmation rate to 50 percent - 7 percent shy of former President Bill Clinton's nominees confirmed during his first year in office. "During these last six difficult months, the committee has worked hard to report 27 judicial nominations favorably to the Senate, including six to the Courts of Appeals," said Mr. Leahy, Vermont Democrat.

Approved and sent to the floor for final consideration yesterday were: Callie V. Granade to be U.S. District Court judge for the Southern District of Alabama; Marcia S. Krieger to be U.S. District Court judge for the District of Colorado; James C. Mahan to be U.S. District Court judge for the District of Nevada; Philip R. Martinez to be U.S. District Court judge for the Western District of Texas; and C. Ashley Royal to be U.S. District Court judge for the Middle District of Georgia.

"I congratulate all of you on being selected by President Bush to serve in high office. After reviewing your distinguished records, I have no doubt that you will do great service for the citizens of this country upon confirmation," said Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, Utah Republican and ranking Judiciary Committee member.

The 14 nominees awaiting final Senate action could, however, be held hostage to another feud erupting over legislation funding programs for homeless veterans.

A Republican Senator has placed an anonymous hold on the bill's final passage, and its chief sponsor said he may block judiciary nominations dear to Republicans to shake the hold.

"I will stop nominees if I have to," said Sen. Paul Wellstone, Minnesota Democrat. "I feel strongly about it and am prepared to fight really hard on this."

Meanwhile, Sen. Christopher S. Bond, Missouri Republican, said yesterday there is "no good reason" for Senate Democratic leaders to block a confirmation vote on Eugene Scalia, President Bush's nominee to become solicitor of the Labor Department.

Mr. Bond said Mr. Scalia is "languishing in limbo" because he is the son of Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, who ruled with the majority last year in favor of Mr. Bush in the contested Florida presidential election.

"The only basis on which Mr. Scalia is being blocked is because Democrats do not agree with the results of last year's election," Mr. Bond said.

"They don't like the fact that George Bush emerged as the new president and they are doing everything in their power to frustrate and impede his administration from pursuing its agenda," Mr. Bond said.

Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, South Dakota Democrat, said Tuesday there will be no vote on Mr. Scalia's nomination.

A Bush administration official said Mr. Daschle's announcement came on the one-year anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision that vacated a Florida court's decision to extend the deadline for vote counting.

"It was payback day," the official said.

Mr. Daschle said he will not be influenced by Republicans' strategy of placing "holds" on nominations to the National Labor Relations Board, which Democrats and their union supporters view as an important agency.

"I think further holds just complicate circumstances," Mr. Daschle said. "Reciprocal holds generate more reciprocal holds, and ultimately nobody moves. And that isn't healthy."

Cheney Makes Appeal for More Judges

The Associated Press
Wednesday, December 5, 2001

Vice President Cheney on Thursday joined a long list of Republicans urging the Senate to confirm more of President Bush's judicial nominations before the Senate leaves for the year.

"President Bush has fulfilled his constitutional responsibility to the federal judiciary," Cheney said in a letter to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "He has submitted more judicial nominations in his first year than any other recent president. ... I urge your committee to act so the Senate, in the remainder of this session and next year, can likewise fulfill its constitutional responsibility and fill the more than 100 vacancies on the federal court."

Republicans have been complaining since June that the Democrat-controlled Senate has not confirmed

enough of Bush's nominations. The Senate has confirmed 18 of Bush's 44 nominations.

Leahy defends his committee's work.

"We have matched or exceeded the number of confirmations of judges during the first year of the first Bush Administration, the first year of the Clinton Administration and the last year of the first Clinton term," he said Wednesday. "We are holding more hearings on more judicial nominees faster and reporting and confirming more than during the last 61/2 years."

Senate Confirms Three More Judges as Republicans Increase Pressure to get More Confirmations Before End of Year

By Jesse Holland
The Associated Press
Thursday, December 6, 2001

The Senate on Thursday confirmed three of President Bush's judicial nominees, elevating New Mexico appellate judge Harris L. Hartz to the Denver-based 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Hartz was confirmed 99-0. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, did not vote. The 10th Circuit Court handles appeals from Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Kansas and Oklahoma.

Also approved by voice vote were new U.S. District Judges Danny Reeves of Kentucky and Joe Heaton of Oklahoma.

Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said there are six more judges awaiting Senate confirmation, and when those six are finished, the number of vacant judicial positions will drop below 100 for the first time since Democrats took over the Senate.

"I am proud of the work the committee has done on nominations, and I am proud that by the end of the day, we will have confirmed 21 judges," Leahy said. "I hope that by the end of this session, that total will rise to about 30."

Republicans have been pushing for more judicial confirmations by the Democrat-controlled Senate. Senate Republican Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., called the Senate a "a black hole of inactivity" and Vice President Cheney wrote a letter asking for speedier confirmations earlier this week.

"The failure to confirm qualified individuals to serve in the federal government and the federal judiciary hurts the American people," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. "It's time for the Senate to act on the president's nominees and ensure that the important work of American government can be done and that justice can be carried out."

Albuquerque Attorney Confirmed as Circuit Judge

The Associated Press
Thursday, December 6, 2001

The U.S. Senate on Thursday confirmed an Albuquerque attorney as a judge on the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Harris Hartz now has to be sworn in before taking his seat on the Denver-based court. The 10th Circuit carries legal jurisdiction over New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, Utah and Wyoming.

Sen. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M., said the unanimous endorsement shows the strong bipartisan support for Hartz.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., said he was convinced of Harris' qualifications.

"His presence on the 10th Circuit will certainly elevate that court, and I look forward to what I'm sure will be a continuation of his distinguished career on the bench," Domenici said.

Hartz was a New Mexico Court of Appeals judge from 1989 to 1999. He left the court to join the Albuquerque law firm Stier, Anderson and Malone.

Hartz is also a former Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of New Mexico.

The Senate has not yet scheduled a confirmation vote on the nomination of William Johnson of Roswell as a U.S. District Court judge in New Mexico.

Cheney Jumps In

By Byron York
National Review
Wednesday, December 5, 2001

At a time of increasing tension between the Justice Department and Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy over the administration's antiterrorist policies, the White House has entered into battle on another front with a letter to the chairman from Vice President Dick Cheney blasting the committee's record on confirming judges.

"As we near the end of the first session of the 107th Congress," Cheney writes in the letter dated December 4, "vacancies on the federal bench are occurring at a faster pace than the confirmations of new judges, and barely one in four of President Bush's nominees has received a hearing and a vote."

"In recent past administrations," Cheney continues, "well over 50 percent of judicial nominees

been confirmed in a new president's first year. In 1989, President George H.W. Bush had 62 percent of his nominees confirmed by the end of his first year. In 1993, President Clinton had 57 percent confirmed. To date, President Bush has only had 28 percent of his nominees confirmed."

Cheney tells Leahy that "the current record with respect to circuit court appointments is even worse." While Bush has nominated 28 candidates to federal appeals courts, Cheney says, just five have been confirmed. "Indeed, 75 percent of the president's circuit nominees are still awaiting a hearing before your committee. This poor record of confirmations is having a negative impact on a number of these vital courts." Cheney mentions two nominees to the District of Columbia circuit by name, Miguel Estrada and John Roberts, calling them "outstanding, widely praised nominations" who have not received a hearing before Leahy's committee.

"President Bush has fulfilled his constitutional responsibility to the federal judiciary," Cheney writes. "He announced his first nominees more than six months ago; eight of them have yet to receive a hearing." Cheney concludes, "I urge your committee to act so the Senate, in the remainder of this session and next year, can likewise fulfill its constitutional responsibility and fill the more than one hundred vacancies on the federal courts. It is time for the Senate to act."

The letter is the product of strategy sessions between Senate aides and the lawyers in the White House counsel's office, both of them frustrated by the slow pace of judicial confirmations. Although the letter calls for immediate action, in reality the administration has no hope for anything happening before January at the earliest. "It's meant to lay down a marker for next year," says one Hill aide. "Next year, you'll see a concerted effort from the Senate and the White House."

As happy as they are to receive high-profile help from the White House, some in the GOP worry that the timing of Cheney's letter is not particularly good. First, Leahy actually held a confirmation hearing on Wednesday, considering the nominations of five candidates for the federal district courts. Second, Leahy is engaged in a ongoing battle with the Justice Department and Attorney General John Ashcroft over military tribunals, detention of terrorist suspects and witnesses, waivers of attorney-client privilege, and other issues in the war on terrorism. Cheney's letter arrived a day before Ashcroft's much-anticipated appearance before the Judiciary Committee, and some in the GOP worry that it might divert attention from the anti-terrorism issue.

Still, Republicans hope the letter will convince Leahy that the White House and Senate GOP mean business. "As soon as we get back [from the year-end holidays]," says the Republican aide, "they better start moving some people or nothing will happen in the Senate. Or that's the plan."

EXCERPT

One last item, and then I'll be happy to take questions.

The president would like to commend the Senate for last night's confirmation of John Walters as the director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy. But the president would also like to remind the Senate of the important work that remains to be done this year. There are 153 individuals awaiting confirmation by the Senate. Some are like Eugene Scalia, nominated to be secretary -- solicitor of the Department of Labor, who have passed out of committee but simply await a vote on the floor of the Senate. Others, like Otto Reich, the president's nominee to be assistant secretary of State for the Western Hemisphere, has not even been given a fair committee hearing, while other nominations have languished in the Senate for months.

The rate of confirmation of federal judges, particularly circuit court judges, in the Senate is very, very troubling. Federal judicial seats are being vacated at a rate faster than the Senate is confirming new people to these positions, and despite a record number of nominees by President Bush, there are fewer federal judges today than at the beginning of the administration, because of the Senate's failure to act. President Bush has nominated 60 judges to the federal judiciary, and only 18, or 27 percent, have been confirmed. The Senate confirmed 57 percent of President Clinton's judicial nominations in his first year; 62 percent of President Bush's in his first year; and 91 percent of President Reagan's judicial nominations.

Vice President Cheney, earlier this week, sent a letter to Senator Leahy citing the slow pace of confirmations, and urged the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Senate to take action so that justice can be done.

The failure to confirm qualified individuals to serve in the federal government and the federal judiciary hurts the American people.

Senator Leahy Does Not Meet His Own Standards
By John Nowacki

In recent letters to the Wall Street Journal and the Washington Times, Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy continues to insist that with him at the helm, judicial nominations are being confirmed at fair pace and that the Democrats' record on judicial nominations does credit to the Senate. Unfortunately, neither claim is true.

Of President Bush's 64 judicial nominees, 21 have been confirmed - 33 percent. In his first year, a Democrat Senate confirmed 27 of President Clinton's 47 nominees - 57 percent. For former President Bush - again with a Democrat Senate - the total was 15 of 24 (62 percent), and for President Reagan, it was 41 of 45 (91 percent). Three of President Bush's nominees were confirmed yesterday afternoon, meaning that the disparity was even greater when Mr. Leahy declared that he was keeping up the pace.

Obviously, comparing the number of confirmations without factoring in the number of nominees doesn't paint an accurate picture. Yet Mr. Leahy won't address the percentage of nominees he allows out of his committee - and it's not hard to see why.

When you factor in the date a President starts nominating judges, Senator Leahy's case looks even worse. President Bush sent down his first eleven nominations on May 9, and by the beginning of August, more than 40 nominees were before the Senate. President Clinton, in contrast, didn't make his first lower court nominations until August 6. Yet by December, 27 of his nominees were confirmed. With three more months in which to work, the Senate hasn't even confirmed that many of this President's nominees.

So much for keeping pace with other Presidents' first years. And when it comes to doing credit to the Senate, the Democrats' record isn't much better.

From the beginning of President Bush's administration, Democrats have made it clear that they would manufacture whatever obstacles they could to block this President's nominees. They held a retreat to discuss how to make a nominee's ideology the issue, regardless of his qualifications. They held hearings to justify ideological litmus tests. They held hearings to explain why a nominee must now bear the burden of proof, a complete reversal of past practice. They insisted that without the support of both of a state's Senators, a nomination is dead in the water. And so on. The search for qualified, fair judges who will follow the law has become a process of picking whose "acceptable" political beliefs will allow them into an institution where personal beliefs and politics are supposed to be set aside.

Last year, Mr. Bush said the Senate should act on a nomination within 60 days of its submission. On several occasions, Mr. Leahy stood on the Senate floor and very publicly agreed. This year, eight of the President's nominees have waited 212 days - and not for Senate action, but for a hearing. The other 43 nominees have waited less time, but for most, that 60 day marker has come and gone.

Now Senator Leahy ignores that and talks about a different deadline altogether. "President Bush's nominations confirmed since this summer have been acted upon within 60 days, on average, of receipt of an American Bar Association peer review," he wrote to the Washington Times. What about the 41 nominations made by August 1, before the summer ended? What about nominees whose ABA reviews came in months ago? Nominees like Miguel Estrada (unanimously well qualified, July 9), Jeffrey Sutton (qualified/well qualified, June 11), John Roberts (unanimously well qualified, June 20) or Deborah Cook (unanimously qualified, June 11)? Mr. Leahy doesn't say. And again, it's not hard to see why.

The number of judicial vacancies has always been important to Senator Leahy - or it was important until recently. He and others like Majority Leader Tom Daschle have spoken of a "vacancy crisis" or "judicial emergency" when the number of vacancies was actually much lower than it is today. Mr. Leahy has explained how empty judgeships delay justice, and as everyone knows, justice delayed is justice denied.

The number of empty judgeships has skyrocketed this year. A year ago, there were 67 judicial vacancies. By Inauguration Day, that figure was in the 80s. A few days before Mr. Bush's first nominations were made it hit 100. And it hasn't dropped below it since then.

Senator Leahy's Washington Times letter contains a truly obnoxious comment about empty judgeships. "At the time Republicans took charge of the Judiciary Committee in 1995, there were 65 judicial vacancies," he wrote. "When they turned over the gavel this summer, we inherited 103 vacancies, which rose to 111 by the time the committee was organized . . ."

Republicans took over with 65 vacancies, and when their session was all but over last December, there were only 67. In the midst of the Florida election debacle, who would have expected them to confirm any more of the outgoing President's judges? Considering that from 1991 to mid-1994, vacancies (under a Democrat Senate) were always over 100, that's not too bad.

Besides, vacancies are inevitable - judges with lifetime appointments will eventually retire or resign. What matters is how the Senate handles them when the nominees to fill them are there. That Mr. Leahy has not allowed that number to go down despite the number of nominees before him says volumes about how serious he is when it comes to easing the burden on undermanned courts and long-suffering litigants.

On June 16, 1997, Senator Leahy delivered a Senate floor speech that he would do well to remember. "A President should be given a great deal of latitude on who he nominates to the Federal court. If we disagree with a nomination, then we can vote against it," he said. "But, frankly, Mr. President, not only does it damage the integrity and the independence of the Federal judiciary by just holding judicial nominations hostage where nobody ever even votes on them, but I think it damages the integrity of the U.S. Senate."

In that speech, Mr. Leahy set a reasonable standard for what it takes to do credit to the Senate. Unfortunately, his actions don't measure up.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Enclosed for your consideration is a legislative proposal entitled "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act," along with a sectional analysis. This legislation would establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism.

As the Congress recognized in section 626 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-77), there is a pressing need for a program to compensate victims of international terrorism in a fair, coherent, and timely manner. Currently, compensation for victims is highly erratic -- dependent on a number of legislative programs, litigation, and in many cases private relief bills. This ad hoc approach raises serious questions of equity and fairness for the victims. In addition, there is a particular need to provide a rational compensation program where state-sponsored terrorism is involved. Recent legislation permitting a handful of victim plaintiffs to attach the blocked assets of foreign states designated as sponsors of terrorism is not only arbitrary but undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests.

The Honorable
J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives

Background

Victims of international terrorism currently are eligible to receive compensation under a variety of legislative schemes. If they are U.S. government employees, they are entitled to federal benefit programs designed to replace income and other expenses, and in some cases death gratuity benefits. Private victims, whether they are U.S. nationals or foreign nationals, may receive compensation from their employers or insurers, and in the case of aircraft incidents from airlines or airlines' insurers. Both U.S. government and private U.S. victims also are eligible for assistance from the Crime Victims Fund administered by the Department of Justice.

In the case of the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks, Congress has established a special compensation program administered by the Attorney General, acting through a Special Master. See Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (Public Law 107-42). Victims of the attacks (including both U.S. and foreign nationals) may file claims for compensation and any awards are paid from the U.S. Treasury. Legislation has been introduced recently seeking to bring the U.S. victims of the East Africa bombings within the September 11 compensation program.

In addition, certain U.S. victims and their families are filing lawsuits seeking compensatory and punitive damages against designated foreign state sponsors of terrorism. A series of measures were enacted beginning in 1996 to repeal the historic immunity of foreign states from litigation, thus permitting victims or their survivors to sue designated terrorist states, and to collect on their default judgments either out of blocked assets or the U.S. Treasury.

In short, different levels of compensation are being provided to victims of international terrorism depending on the terrorist incident at issue, their ability to identify a foreign state sponsor of terrorism and pursue litigation, or their effectiveness in obtaining Congressional support for private relief. Also, recent legislation permitting collection against the blocked assets of foreign states undermines U.S. foreign policy and national security interests. The legislation impairs our ability to use blocked assets as diplomatic leverage and invites similar measures by other countries. Moreover, legislative initiatives permitting the attachment of diplomatic or consular property may contravene our international legal obligations.

A Rational Compensation Program

In view of the foregoing, the Administration believes that a comprehensive and rational program to compensate victims of international terrorism is urgently needed. The proposed legislation establishes just such a program, building upon the legislation enacted to compensate the September 11 victims.

The proposed legislation contains the following key elements:

- Acts of "international terrorism" (as defined in the statute) both within and outside the United States would be covered by the program.

- Where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, all U.S. national and U.S. government employee victims would be covered. Where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, all victims (including foreign nationals) would be covered.

- The Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, would make a threshold determination as to whether a terrorist incident comes within the scope of the program. If the incident is covered, a victim or victim's representative will be able to recover without having to prove in a court action who was responsible for the act of international terrorism.

- Claimants would then file claims for compensation with the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission (an agency within the Department of Justice with expertise in handling claims). The Commission would review the claims and issue a lump-sum award.

- In the event of a death directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, an eligible individual would receive an award of $1 million, adjusted for inflation.

- In the event of physical injury directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, an eligible individual would be entitled to economic and noneconomic losses, up to the same amount as available for death claims.

- The amount of the compensation would be reduced by any payments the claimant has received or is entitled to receive from collateral sources.

- The Foreign Claims Settlement Commission would issue a final, written decision, and certify any award to the Secretary of Treasury for payment.

- Awards would be paid from the Judgment Fund, for which there is already a permanent, indefinite appropriation under 31 U.S.C. 1304.

- Victims of acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act may "opt in" to the new compensation system, provided that they hold a final judgment for a claim brought against a foreign state sponsor of terrorism.

- This Act would be the exclusive remedy for compensating eligible individuals for death or injury resulting from an act of international terrorism. Individuals could not file lawsuits against the U.S. government or foreign states, or instrumentalities thereof.

- Nothing in the Act, however, limits rights of recovery against private individuals or entities who may be responsible for the act of international terrorism.

- The United States would be subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to all rights related to the injury of an individual paid under the program.

The Administration looks forward to working with you on this important legislative package.

Sincerely,

Colin Powell

A BILL

To establish a comprehensive federal program to compensate victims of international terrorism.

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101 SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 102 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

There is established the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Program ("Program") under which monetary awards shall be made in accordance with this Act to eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism.

SEC. 103 DEFINITIONS

In this Act, the following definitions apply:

(a) Abroad. - The term "abroad" means outside the United States.

(b) Claimant. - The term "claimant" means an individual filing a claim for compensation under this Act.

(c) Collateral Source. - The term "collateral source" means life insurance, pension funds, death benefit or disability programs, and payments by Federal, State or local governments related to the act of international terrorism, and payments from whatever source similar in purpose to the foregoing.

(d) Commission. - The term "Commission" means the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission.

(e) Economic Loss. - The term "economic loss" means any pecuniary loss resulting from the injury inflicted as a result of the act of international terrorism, including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities.

(f) Employee of the United States Government. - The term "employee of the United States Government" means a civilian employee in any branch of the Government of the United States, including an officer or employee of an instrumentality wholly owned by the United States, a member of the U.S. armed forces, or an individual rendering personal service to the United States similar to the service of a civilian employee of the United States or a member of the U.S. armed forces, with pay, without pay or for nominal pay, when a statute authorizes the acceptance or use of the service, or authorizes payment of travel or other expenses of the individual, but does not include an independent contractor.

(g) Noneconomic Losses. - The term "noneconomic losses" means losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), and other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature.

(h) International Terrorism. - The term "international terrorism" has the meaning given in section 2331(1), title 18 of the United States Code.

(i) National of the United States. - The term "national of the United States" has the meaning given in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)).

(j) Personal Representative. - The term "personal representative" means an executor or administrator of the estate of the deceased, or persons who perform substantially the same function under applicable law.

(k) United States. - The term "United States" means the States, the District of Colombia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Mariana Islands, the territories and possessions of the United States, the territorial sea of the United States, and the airspace above them.

SEC. 104 ADMINISTRATION

(a) Threshold Determination. -

(1) Upon the occurrence of a terrorist incident, the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, shall promptly determine in writing whether an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) of this Act has taken place.

(2) The Secretary of State's determination under this section shall be final and conclusive, and it shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

(3) If the Secretary determines that an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) has taken place, the Secretary shall publish such a determination in the Federal Register and transmit a copy of it to the Commission.

(b) Commission. -

(1) Upon receipt of the threshold determination set forth in subsection (a), the Commission shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, adjudicate, and render final decisions with respect to claims filed under section 105 in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) A decision of the Commission to make an award with respect to a claim shall be contained in a written, final decision of the Commission on that claim. The Commission shall transmit to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General copies of all final decisions made by the Commission under the Program.

(3) When a final decision of the Commission makes an award of compensation, the transmittal of the final decision shall be accompanied by the Commission's certification of that award to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment.

(4) Except to the extent inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, the provisions of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) shall apply to claims filed under the Program.

(c) Authorization of Appropriations. -- There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the administrative and support costs for the Department of State, the Department of Justice, the Department of Defense, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105 FILING OF CLAIMS

(a) In General. -- Claims for compensation under the Program shall be filed with the Commission on the form developed under subsection (b) and shall state the factual basis for eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation sought.

(b) Claim Form. --

(1) The Commission shall develop a form that claimants shall use when submitting claims under subsection (a).

(2) The claim form at a minimum shall request -

(A) in the case of a claim filed with respect to a decedent, information demonstrating the decedent's death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(B) in the case of a claim not involving a death, information demonstrating - (i) the physical harm that the claimant suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism; and (ii) any economic and noneconomic losses that the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the individual is filing, suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(C) in the case of a claim filed by a parent or legal guardian, information demonstrating the claimant's status as a parent or legal guardian;

(D) information regarding collateral sources of payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

(c) The claim form shall state clearly and conspicuously that filing of a claim under this Program constitutes a waiver as described in section 109(c).

SEC. 106 ELIGIBILITY

(a) In General. - The Commission shall review each claim filed under this Program and determine whether the claimant is an eligible individual under subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Eligible Individuals. -- A claimant is an eligible individual if the Commission determines that such claimant is --

(1) where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, an individual who suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(2) where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, an individual who, as of the date on which the act of international terrorism occurred, (A) was a national of the United States or an employee of the United States Government; and (B) suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism;

(3) in the case of a decedent who is an individual within the meaning of subparagraph (b)(1) or (b)(2), the personal representative of the decedent who files a claim on behalf of the decedent; or

(4) in the case of an individual who is an individual within the meaning of subparagraph

(b)(1) or (b)(2), and who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent or incapacitated, the parent or legal guardian of the individual who files a claim on behalf of the individual.

(2) An individual identified by the Attorney General to have been a participant or conspirator in the act of international terrorism, or a representative of such individual, shall not be eligible to receive compensation under the Program.

(c) Exclusion for Armed Conflict. - This Program does not apply to any claim arising out of injury or death sustained while engaged in armed conflict by a member of the U.S. Armed Forces serving on active duty. The Secretary of Defense shall determine promptly whether the incident giving rise to the claims shall be deemed an armed conflict for the purposes of the preceding sentence. The Secretary of Defense's determination under this subsection shall be final and conclusive, and it shall not be subject to review in any judicial, administrative or other proceeding.

SEC. 107 NATURE OF AWARDS

(a) Awards shall be made without regard to the negligence or any other theory of liability of the claimant or of the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim.

(b) In the event of a death resulting from an act of international terrorism, there shall be an award of $1 million to an eligible individual, adjusted at three-year intervals beginning January 1, 2005, to reflect changes in the consumer price index for the immediately preceding three-year period.

(c) In the event of physical injury directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, compensation shall be determined on the net present value of the economic and noneconomic losses demonstrated by the claimant, provided that the amount awarded shall not exceed the amount provided for under the preceding subsection.

(d) The portion of any award for actual and projected pain and suffering or emotional distress resulting from a physical injury shall not exceed $250,000, adjusted at three year intervals beginning January 1, 2005, to reflect changes in the consumer price index for the immediately preceding three year period.

(e) Amounts may not be awarded for punitive or exemplary purposes.

(f) The Commission shall reduce the amount awarded by the amount of the collateral source payments the claimant has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

SEC. 108 LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS

(a) Single Claim. -- Not more than one claim may be submitted under this Program by an individual or on behalf of an individual with respect to an act of international terrorism.

(b) Time Limitation for Filing. -- No claim may be filed on the basis of an act of international terrorism after the date that is 2 years after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a determination under section 104(a) of this Act.

(c) Bar on Other Claims. - No claim may be made in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding if such claim could have been filed under this Act in the absence of subsection (b).

SEC. 109 INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE

(a) Compensation may be awarded under the Program in relation to acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act and with respect to which an individual holds a final judgment for a claim brought under section 1605(a)(7), title 28 of the United States Code.

(b) The Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, shall issue, promptly after the effective date of this Act, determinations whether a terrorist incident within the scope of subsection (a) of this section was an act of international terrorism as defined in section 103(h) of this Act.

(c) By filing a claim under this section, the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, (1) waives any right to file and any right to continue to pursue any judicial, administrative or other proceeding for damages sustained as a result of the act of international terrorism, and (2) relinquishes all claims and rights to compensatory and punitive damages and amounts awarded as judicial sanctions under such judgments.

SEC. 110 PAYMENT OF AWARDS

(a) Judgment Fund. - Awards under this Program shall be paid from the appropriation made under section 1304 of title 31, United States Code.

(b) Conforming Amendment. - Section 1304(a)(3) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection (E) -

> "(E) pursuant to a final decision of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission under the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 111 EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDY

(a) In General. - Subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, this Program constitutes the exclusive remedy in the United States with respect to the injury or death of an eligible individual caused by an act of international terrorism after the effective date of this Act. The United States or a foreign state, or instrumentalities thereof, shall have no liability to eligible individuals, their legal representatives, spouses, dependents, next of kin, heirs, successors, assignees, and any other persons entitled to recover damages in a judicial, administrative, or other proceeding in the United States as a result of the injury or death caused by an act of international terrorism.

(b) Nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of recovery against persons or entities who may be involved in an act of international terrorism and who are not foreign states or instrumentalities or officials thereof.

(c) Nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of an eligible individual to bring an action to obtain collateral source payments.

(d) Conforming Amendments. --

(1) Section 1605, title 28 of the United States Code is amended -
(A) in subsection (a), by striking subparagraph (7);
(B) by striking subsection (e); and
(C) by striking subsection (f).

(2) Section 1610, title 28 of the United States Code is amended -

(A) in subsection (a), by striking subparagraph (7);
(B) in subsection (b)(2), by striking ",or (7)"; and
(C) by striking subsection (f).

(3) Section 589 of Title V of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1997, as enacted in Public Law 104-208, Div. A, title I, sec. 101(c) is repealed.

SEC. 112 SUBROGRATION

(a) The United States shall be subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to all rights related to an injury or death of an individual paid under the Program.

(b) Nothing in this Act shall limit or otherwise affect any right of the United States, including any right of recovery from a foreign state or instrumentality thereof, under any applicable law.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

SEC. 101 SHORT TITLE

This section provides that this Act may be cited as the "Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Act of 2002."

SEC. 102 ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

This section establishes the Compensation for Victims of International Terrorism Program ("Program"). The Program is a comprehensive federal system under which monetary awards will be made in accordance with this Act to eligible individuals who are physically injured or killed as a result of an act of international terrorism. As Congress recognized in section 626 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-77), there is a pressing need to rationalize the current piecemeal approach to compensation for victims of international terrorism.

This Program is modeled loosely on the compensation program that was established by Congress for the victims of the September 11 attacks (see Title IV of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, Public Law 107-42). This Program, however, sets in place a permanent structure to compensate victims of future acts of international terrorism, and covers acts of international terrorism both in the United States and abroad. Instead of a Special Master appointed by the Attorney General, as is the case with the September 11 program, the review and adjudication of claims is committed to the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission ("Commission"). The Commission is a quasi-independent agency of the Department of Justice which has career staff with substantial experience handling large-scale claims programs.

SEC. 103 DEFINITIONS

This section sets forth the definitions of critical terms in this Act. Notably, the Act relies on the definition of "international terrorism" already contained in 18 U.S.C. 2331. The definition of "employee of the United States Government" modifies and expands upon the definition in 5 U.S.C. 8101, which applies to the federal worker's compensation program administered by the Department of Labor. It is intended to be a broad definition, covering all categories of U.S. government personnel, including the military, Civil Service employees, members of the Foreign Service (including locally employed staff), and personal service contractors.

SEC. 104 ADMINISTRATION

This section lays out the administrative framework of the Program. As set forth in subsection (a), the first step is that upon the occurrence of a terrorist incident, the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Attorney General, will issue a written determination if he concludes that the incident is an act of "international terrorism" within the meaning of the Act. This determination, which must be published in the Federal Register, triggers the application of the Program.

The second step is that claimants may file claims for compensation with the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission. Subsection (b) explains that the Commission shall have jurisdiction to receive, examine, adjudicate and render final decisions with respect to claims. A decision to make an award shall be in writing, and copies of such decision shall be transmitted to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General. When the Commission decides to make an award of compensation, the transmittal of the final decision will be accompanied by certification of the award to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment out of the Judgment Fund (31 U.S.C. 1304).

Subsection (b) further provides that except to the extent inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, the provisions of title I of the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended (22 U.S.C. 1621 et seq.) will apply to claims filed under the Program. Accordingly, the Program can take advantage of the existing statutory authorities of the Commission, for example, to promulgate regulations necessary to perform its functions; to give public notice of the time when claims may be filed; to take evidence through documents, hearings, and depositions; to issue awards in accordance with the applicable principles of international law, justice and equity; and to issue final decisions.

Finally, subsection (c) authorizes such sums as may be necessary to pay the administrative and support costs for the Department of State, the Department of Justice, and the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 105 FILING OF CLAIMS

This section sets forth claims filing procedures similar to those established for the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks. Subsection (a) requires claims for compensation to be filed with the Commission on a standard form and to state the factual basis for eligibility for compensation and the amount of compensation sought.

Subsection (b) directs the Commission to develop a form that claimants will use when submitting claims. In the case of a claim filed with respect to a decedent, the claim form should request information demonstrating the decedent's death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. In the case of a claim not involving a death, the claim form should request information concerning (1) the physical harm that the claimant suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism; and (2) information concerning any economic and noneconomic losses that the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, suffered as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. The claim form also should request information regarding collateral source payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

Subsection (c) provides that the claim form will state clearly and conspicuously that filing of a claim under this Program constitutes a waiver as described in section 109(c).

SEC. 106 ELIGIBILITY

This section contains provisions governing the eligibility of claimants for compensation. Subsection (a) explains that the Commission will review each claim filed under this Program and determine whether the claimant is an eligible individual.

Subsection (b) sets forth the criteria for a determination that a claimant is an "eligible individual." Where the act of international terrorism occurs within the United States, this would be an individual who suffered physical injury or death as a direct result of the act of international terrorism. Where the act of international terrorism occurs outside the United States, this would be an individual who, as of the date on which the act of international terrorism occurred, (A) was a national of the United States or an employee of the United States Government; and (B) suffered physical harm or death as a direct result thereof. In the case of a decedent, the "eligible individual" is the personal representative of the decedent who files a claim on behalf of the decedent. In the case of an individual who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent, or incapacitated, the parent or legal guardian is an "eligible individual." An individual identified by the Attorney General to have been a participant or conspirator in the act of international terrorism, or a representative of such individual, shall not be eligible to receive compensation under this Act.

Subsection (c) clarifies that the Program does not apply to any claim arising out of injury or death sustained while engaged in armed conflict by a member of the U.S. Armed Forces serving on active duty. The Secretary of Defense will determine whether the incident giving rise to the claims should be deemed an armed conflict for the purposes of the Program.

SEC. 107 NATURE OF AWARDS

Section 107 sets forth conditions regarding compensation awarded under the Program. Subsection (a) provides that compensation under the Program is to be awarded without regard to the negligence or any other theory of liability of the claimant, or of the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim.

Subsection (b) provides that in the event of a death resulting from an act of international terrorism, there will be an award of $1 million to the eligible individual. This amount will be adjusted for inflation.

Subsection (c) provides that in the event of physical injury directly resulting from an act of international terrorism, compensation shall be determined on the basis of the net present value of the economic and noneconomic losses demonstrated by the claimant, up to the amount available for death claims.

Subsection (d) places a cap of $250,000 on that portion of an award regarding actual and projected pain and suffering or emotional distress from a physical injury. This amount will be adjusted for inflation.

Subsection (e) provides that compensation awarded under the Program may not include punitive or exemplary damages.

Subsection (f) directs the Commission to reduce the amount of compensation awarded by the amount of the collateral source payments the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, has received or is entitled to receive as a result of the act of international terrorism.

SEC. 108 LIMITATIONS ON CLAIMS

Subsection (a) provides that not more than one claim may be submitted under this program by an individual or on behalf of an individual.

Subsection (b) provides that no claim may be filed after the date that is 2 years after the date of publication in the Federal Register of a determination under section 104 of this Act.

Subsection (c) provides that no claim may be made in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding if such claim could have been filed under this Act in the absence of a statute of limitations issue.

SEC. 109 INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE

Subsection (a) provides that compensation may be awarded under this Program in relation to acts of international terrorism that took place before the effective date of this Act, provided that an individual holds a final judgment for a claim brought under section 1605(a)(7) of title 28, United States Code.

Subsection (b) provides that the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Attorney General, will issue promptly a written determination as to whether a terrorist incident that comes within the scope of subsection (a) of this section is an act of international terrorism within the meaning of this Act.

Subsection (c) makes clear that upon the submission of a claim for compensation under this section, the claimant, or the individual on whose behalf the claimant is filing a claim, (1) waives any right to file or to continue to pursue a civil action (or to be a party to an action) in any court for damages sustained as a result of the terrorist incident, and (2) relinquishes all claims and rights to compensatory and punitive damages and amounts awarded as judicial sanctions under such judgments. The preceding sentence does not apply to a civil action to obtain collateral source payments.

SEC. 110 PAYMENT OF AWARDS

Subsection (a) provides that awards under this Program will be paid from the Judgment Fund pursuant to the appropriation made under 31 U.S.C. 1304.

Subsection (b) makes a conforming amendment to 31 U.S.C. 1304.

SEC. 111 EXCLUSIVITY OF REMEDY

This section makes clear that litigation against the United States and foreign states cannot be a part of a fair, timely, and rational compensation scheme for U.S. victims of international terrorism.

Subsection (a) provides that subject to subsections (b) and (c), the compensation awarded under the Program is the exclusive means by which U.S. nationals and U.S. government employees who are injured or killed by an act of international terrorism may receive compensation. Therefore, any judicial, administrative or other proceedings against the United States or a foreign state, or instrumentalities thereof, are barred.

Subsection (b) clarifies that nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of recovery against individuals or entities who may have been involved in an act of international terrorism who are not foreign states or instrumentalities or officials thereof.

Subsection (c) provides that nothing in this Act limits or otherwise affects any right of an eligible individual to bring a civil action to obtain collateral source payments.

Subsection (d) makes certain conforming amendments to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act and related legislation in order to preclude suits for damages against foreign states designated as sponsors of terrorism and against foreign officials acting in their official capacity. This would rectify the current situation in which certain victims who have been able to obtain default judgments against foreign states are able to collect hundreds of millions of dollars in payments, while other U.S. victims obtain far less. However, as set forth in section 109, those plaintiffs who have obtained judgments under 28 U.S.C. 1605(a)(7) would be entitled to opt in to this new compensation system.

SEC. 112 SUBROGRATION

Subsection (a) provides that for each individual paid under this section, the United States becomes subrogated, to the extent of the payments, to rights of that individual.

Subsection (b) provides that nothing in this Act shall limit or otherwise affect any right of the United States, including any right of recovery from a foreign state or instrumentality thereof, under any applicable law.

What are the rules of engagement for speeches or letters that Karl and I give? For instance, if we attend a fundraiser for a candidate, can we urge participants to give again? Can we attend an association meeting and recommend support for particular campaigns? Can we send out a letter on non-official stationary urging support for a candidate, particularly as an invitation for an upcoming fundraiser?

The general principle, of course, is that White House and PAS officials are allowed to engage in a wide variety of political activity, including while on duty and in their offices -- with a caveat being that you may not "personally solicit political contributions," even at a political fundraiser at which you are the featured speaker. That exception to the general principle is somewhat odd (why allow someone to speak at a fundraiser but not specifically solicit funds?), but the exception is contained in both the statute and the regulations on political activity that apply to White House and PAS officials.

With that in mind, the answers to your three questions are as follows:

1. You should not ask attendees at a fundraiser to contribute financially again (thanking them for their support and what they have already done is fine).

2. You can tell an association which races are most important, closest, etc., and which warrant their general support, but you should not personally ask the associations to contribute financially to particular campaigns.

3. A letter asking for general support for a particular candidate is fine so long as there is no express solicitation for contributions in the letter and the letter is not expressly connected to the fundraiser.

On all fundraisers, letters, and the like, your staffs should continue to keep me informed ahead of time so that we can continue to avoid problems and issues. They have been doing that quite well thus far.

If we consider this guy to be a fair-minded reporter, we probably ought to engage with him. After you've found out as specifically as possible what's on his mind, one person, probably from our office, ought to talk to him -- on background if it's me or Brett, or on the record if the Judge is willing -- to discuss his claims. He's really just trying to make a mountain out of a small group of molehills.

Brett,

I have looked into this matter a little further, and offer the following additional recommendations for managing blackberry emails that are PRA records. As we discussed before, NARA assumes that an email sent via a blackberry is no less a record than an email sent or received from an ARMS managed PC (or a home PC, for that matter), and the only issue is whether it is possible to preserve and manage such record emails when they are sent from one blackberry to another:

1) The simple solution is to cc, or bcc, or forward, each message to the sender's ARMS account, so a copy is automatically captured and managed in ARMS. (Note, similarly, that the 2/26/01 Gonzales memo on the PRA states that PRA an email that is received "on a personal e-mail account" must be "preserved and filed as such by printing it out and saving it or by forwarding it to your White House e-mail account.")

2) As we understand it, the technology does allow downloading of data from the blackberry to a PC or other system. We don't know whether what you purchased includes that feature, but we believe it can be established.

3) The OA project to redesign and upgrade the ARMS system should incorporate a permanent solution to this issue.

I hope this is helpful. Feel free to contact me if you have any questions or comments.

Opening Statement of The Honorable Mel Martinez
Before the U.S. Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs

Thursday, December 13, 2001

Chairman Sarbanes, Ranking Member Gramm, and distinguished Members of the Committee, thank you for the invitation to testify before you this morning. I appreciate this opportunity to address the many ways in which the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) is working to meet the nation's housing and community development needs.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by thanking you and the Members of this Committee for the advice and expertise you provided this year as I settled into town and took on this tremendous challenge. The Committee has shown me great respect, which I appreciate, and we have developed a very positive working relationship.

Let me also thank you for your cooperation in confirming HUD's Presidential nominees. I consider myself fortunate to be surrounded by colleagues who bring great expertise to the job from both the public and private sectors, and have a rich diversity of background and experience. With your continued assistance, we hope to have our entire management team in place in the near future.

Our job is made easier through the support of a President who is firmly committed to HUD's mission of public service. President Bush is an active advocate for our work at HUD. He speaks passionately about the dreams a family can achieve through homeownership. He has joined me on two occasions to stress the point by building homes with Habitat for Humanity… and wants to triple the funding for the HUD program that supports the good work of similar organizations.

President Bush has directed this Department to serve Americans in need not simply by raising their quality of life to some minimum standard, but by fueling their hopes and dreams to achieve the life they always imagined. Despite the success of welfare reform, too many families still live below the poverty line. As a catalyst in our communities, HUD is putting its resources to work empowering citizens to lift themselves out of poverty and into prosperity.

We have touched many lives this year… in many different ways.

The Department reacted quickly and sympathetically following the tragic events in September. I immediately required lenders to provide relief on FHA-insured mortgages for families of the victims, and urged conventional lenders to do the same. They responded, and we have protected these families from losing their homes. A short time later, Secretary Rumsfeld and I also announced a mortgage rate cut for National Guardsmen and Reservists called to active duty.

REV_00137612

HUD provided an additional $700 million in Community Development Block Grant funds to help stimulate New York City's economic recovery. We also allowed waivers of regulatory provisions for the HOME, Section 8, and public housing programs.

Immediately after being sworn in, I took steps to steer HUD's focus back to its core mission: helping families find affordable and decent housing. This means ensuring housing opportunities for those who rent either out of necessity or by choice. And it means creating new opportunities for homeownership, so that more families can achieve what is envied around the world as the American Dream.

The Census Bureau reported in October that the homeownership rate reached an all-time high of 68.1%. Historically, homeownership rates for minority groups have been lower than for the rest of the population. Minority homeownership stands at 49.2%, and while this is a record high and positive news, we must continue to do better in closing the gap.

We have begun to create new opportunities for homeownership, so that more families can achieve what is envied around the world as the American Dream.

This year, HUD reached out to the thousands of low-income families who find the road to homeownership blocked by high downpayments, and proposed the President's American Dream Downpayment Fund. We also put forward the new Federal Housing Administration (FHA) hybrid adjustable rate mortgage, which promotes homeownership by reducing initial homebuying costs. Congress recently created both of these programs, for which you have my thanks.

If we are to further expand the ranks of America's homeowners, we must address the challenge of making the homebuying experience less complicated, the paperwork demands less time-consuming, and the mortgage process itself less expensive.

To ensure that homebuyers have the information they need in order to make an informed purchase, I have undertaken comprehensive reform of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA). In addition to preserving yield spread premiums as a valuable tool for opening the doors of homeownership, reform will: (1) ensure better protections for new homebuyers and those who refinance; (2) offer clarity for the mortgage lending industry about their disclosure responsibilities, and; (3) provide an additional tool to fight predatory lending.

The need for RESPA reform is even more urgent during times of economic uncertainty. Homeownership helps create financial stability for families, and in return brings economic stability to our communities.

Homeownership is an important goal, but is obviously not an option for everyone. I appreciate the need to expand the availability of affordable rental housing, and ensure quality and options for residents. The just-enacted 25 percent increase in the limits for FHA multifamily insurance will help to spur the construction and rehabilitation of affordable rental housing. I am awaiting the recommendations of the Millennial Housing

Commission, as we look to ways to increase the supply of affordable housing. I will continue to urge the industry, and the Government-Sponsored Enterprises in particular, to do much more in the area of affordable housing production.

But let me say that I look forward to the day when we measure compassion not by the number of families living in assisted housing, but the number of families who have moved into a home of their own.

Predatory lending and property flipping are abusive practices that continue to plague homebuyers in cities across the country. Senator Sarbanes, the Administration is particularly concerned about the situation in Baltimore. Since April, our Housing Fraud Initiative has resulted in 40 indictments, six federal arrests, two state arrests, 27 successful prosecutions, and 66 debarments. We have provided relocation assistance to 46 families. We also worked with you, Mr. Chairman, to develop the Credit Watch legislation that was included in the fiscal year 2002 budget.

I am pleased with these accomplishments, but we know there is more work to be done. HUD remains committed to addressing the problems in Baltimore, and we feel confident that the lessons we learn there will be beneficial to the rest of the country.

Exposure to lead-based paint is a serious concern that many low-income citizens deal with on a daily basis. Every American child deserves the opportunity to grow up in a healthy home, safe from the debilitating and often irreversible effects of lead exposure. Because the most common source of exposure is lead paint in older housing, HUD has a critical role in protecting our children. HUD awarded more than $67 million in grants nationwide in October to protect children from lead-based paint, with a focus on eliminating lead hazards in low-income housing.

At HUD, we are working to ease the daily struggles of those who live in the most difficult circumstances. Certainly, this includes the residents of the colonias. Earlier this year, I traveled to the colonias – the communities along the Mexico border steeped in poverty – to see the difficult living conditions for myself. HUD has stepped in to offer assistance, through grants that will bring water and sewer hook-ups, and a Colonias Task Force I established to ensure that HUD programs make an impact in the colonias.

In January, President Bush directed HUD to help lead his Faith-Based and Community Initiatives. We have studied the barriers that prevent grassroots social service providers from reaching out in partnership with the federal government to Americans in need. HUD has prepared a report examining what the Department can do through regulatory and management improvements to "level the playing field" and encourage greater acts of charity in our communities, while preserving Constitutional safeguards.

I would urge the Senate to take up the President's faith-based legislation before Congress adjourns. This legislation is critical to helping HUD expand its partnerships with groups working to meet the housing needs of low-income Americans, the elderly, disabled citizens, and those living with HIV/AIDS.

HUD has a special duty to the nation's vulnerable populations, and this includes those who have no place to call home. Last month, we announced the awarding of more than $1 billion to organizations serving homeless Americans – the largest homeless assistance in history. To streamline and focus the response of the many federal agencies involved in delivering homeless services, I have reactivated the Interagency Council on the Homeless.

In addition, the Administration remains committed to expanding housing opportunities for people with disabilities. For example, a voluntary compliance agreement, signed recently with the District of Columbia Housing Authority, will provide more than 500 fully accessible public housing units to disabled residents. HUD continues to strive to ensure equal housing opportunities for all.

Mr. Chairman, Committee Members warned me during the confirmation process that HUD was plagued by mismanagement on many levels. I understood that meeting the needs of the American people meant improving HUD's management, and I assured you that I was prepared to take on this challenge.

In the past eleven months, HUD has significantly streamlined its management structure to improve the quality and delivery of services, and restore the agency's credibility in the eyes of Congress and the American public

I set a goal that HUD address audit findings made by the Inspector General in a timely manner and make corrections that actually fix serious management problems. As a telling sign that we are committed to doing better, HUD completed the six-month period ending September 30 with no overdue management decisions on any of the Inspector General's 363 audit recommendations – the first time HUD has met that deadline in [TWO? FIVE?] years.

Our goal is to deliver the best possible services to those in need, and we have moved aggressively to ensure that HUD programs are getting the job done.

With the support of the National Education Association, the American Federation of Teachers, and the Fraternal Order of Police, I suspended HUD's Officer Next Door and Teacher Next Door programs in April. This came after officials handed down indictments and felony convictions against buyers who purchased their homes fraudulently. We put into place aggressive monitoring and tightened controls to prevent homebuyer fraud, and restarted the programs in August.

Working with Congress, we terminated HUD's drug elimination program this year. This was a well-intentioned program that suffered from a large number of abuses, and duplicated the work of other Cabinet Departments. Despite the termination of this program, HUD's commitment to ensuring safe and drug-free homes for America's families has not wavered. I am working with the Department of Justice and other agencies in exploring ways to effectively meet this commitment.

Until this year, HUD's credit subsidy – which is used to cover expected losses on FHA multifamily loans – was fraught with uncertainty due to regular appropriations shortfalls. The Department restructured the program to make it more self-sufficient and less dependent on taxpayer dollars. Since the restructuring became effective on October 1, 2001, HUD has issued firm commitments totaling $869 million for more than 10,000 housing units.

I am proud of the strides we have made in identifying the programs that are meeting the needs of the people… and identifying – and fixing – those that are not. HUD is quickly becoming a more efficient, more effective provider of the services no agency but ours can deliver.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my formal testimony so that I may dedicate as much of our remaining time as possible to answering questions from the Committee. As I indicated to you in our last conversation, HUD's ongoing negotiations with the White House regarding the fiscal year 2003 budget preclude me from addressing – in anything more than very general terms – any budget initiatives we may be considering.

In closing, we all understand that housing is a non-partisan issue – one that crosses the lines of politics and party. The families who come to us for help are not interested in our political affiliations, and our success in serving them depends on cooperation. I am happy to say that this is the spirit in which HUD and the Committee have undertaken our work this year… and the same spirit that will guide us tomorrow and into the future. I would like to thank each of you for your personal support of my efforts, and I welcome your guidance as we continue our work together on behalf of the American people.

Thank you.

I have drafted a speech for Judge Gonzales for him to give tomorrow at Fed Society. Any chance you have time to review briefly before I submit the draft to him? I obviously understand if you have other obligations today, but if you have time to review/edit/comment, that would be very helpful. Thanks.

Is either of you aware of a House Joint Resolution on Iraq? This was introduced last week by Congressmen Hyde and Graham and we were told that the WH Counsel's Office (??) had been consulted about it. The version we've seen has a number of problems with it and we're concerned about having the President sign it if it remains a joint resolution. We need to make some changes or change to a concurrent resolution.

Subject: Heads up on Forest Service's road management policy

Although this is different from the Roadless Rule, it covers some related issues. Here are USDA's talking points on the policy announcement that should become public today:

1. The Forest Service has issued an interim directive to the road management policy (January 2001) consistent with recent actions taken by the Chief to protect roadless values.

Specifically, this interim directive (7710-2001-3) clarifies how and when decisions on roads are made and removes from the policy the interim requirements for inventoried roadless areas and contiguous unroaded areas, which are already covered by the Chief's June 7 direction regarding inventoried roadless areas. The policy requires managers to conduct a science-based roads analysis to help make better decisions on all new construction, reconstruction and decommissioning activities beginning July 12, 2001. Maintenance of roads is exempt from the roads analysis requirement. The policy also requires a forest to conduct a forest-scale roads analysis by January 12, 2003. Currently, the August 1999 process titled Roads Analysis: Informing Decisions About Managing the National

Forest Transportation System (FS-643) is the only approved analysis process.

In addition, the agency has consolidated the two interim directives on the Chief's June 7 decision regarding inventoried roadless areas to the Forest Service manual's planning section, where it is more appropriate. This action in no way changes the nature or effect of the Chief's decision including its application to the 58 million acres of inventoried roadless areas identified in the January 12, 2001, Roadless Area Conservation Rule.

2. This action supports Agriculture Secretary Veneman's and Forest Service Chief Dale Bosworth's commitment to protect inventoried roadless areas as important components of the National Forest System. This is the next step to the Chief's June 7 letter and is consistent with Secretary Veneman's principles of making better decisions; working together; protecting forests; protecting communities, homes and property; and protecting access to property.

In contrast to the Roadless Area Conservation Rule, which applies to inventoried roadless areas, the road management policy governs the management of the Forest Service's existing road network. The road management policy provides direction for transportation planning while allowing land management allocations to be made through the forest planning process.

3. The new interim directive on road management is effective immediately and the public will be invited to comment on it. In addition, the Forest Service has issued a separate interim directive to the planning section of the agency's manual to incorporate the Chief's June 7 decision regarding inventoried roadless areas.

bart, could you do tues and wed? if so, i think we'll have a plan, as bk has indicated he is willing to consider sunday and monday night, though he is not committed.

the instant plan would be a second-choice alternative to expansion of the pool, as suggested by bk's prior email.

Dear Ms. Camp,
I don't want to pester you too much, but I wanted to touch base and see whether Hon. Alberto Gonzales will be able to participate in the Washington Council of Lawyers' forum on responses to terrorism on Jan. 9th or 17th.
We will be sending out our membership newsletter on Tuesday, and need to be able to announce the date of this event. Knowing Judge Gonzales' availability will help us to select the final date. Also, although we sincerely hope that Judge Gonzales will be able to participate, if he is unavailable, we would appreciate your checking on whether his Deputy may be able to participate instead.
I look forward to hearing from you by reply email or at 202-942-5063.
Thank you very much.

Dear Chairman Horn:

Thank you very much for providing me your thoughts and insights about the President's recent executive order implementing the Presidential Records Act. Our discussion identified several areas where some outside parties have misdescribed the order because of apparent confusion, and I therefore wanted to take this opportunity to ~~explain~~ further clarify certain aspects of the order for the benefit of you and your colleagues.

At the outset, we are well aware that many historians and academics have publicly suggested that the Presidential Records Act requires release of all Presidential records after expiration of the 12-year period. As you know, that suggestion is simply incorrect. In fact, the Presidential Records Act explicitly states that former and current Presidents retain the right to assert constitutional privileges over Presidential records even after the 12-year period has elapsed, a point that is reflected in the Act's legislative history as well. The statute thus conforms, as it must, to binding Supreme Court precedent. The Supreme Court definitively held in Nixon v. GSA that the Constitution authorizes former Presidents to assert privileges to prevent release of their records. No matter how much some might seek to mandate the release of all Presidential records at a certain point in time, the Supreme Court and Congress have~~s~~ both determined ~~spoken -- and spoken definitively -- in holding~~ that former and current Presidents may assert privileges over such records. ~~And of course, neither the President nor~~, respectively ~~the Congress is at liberty to ignore or override this binding Supreme Court precedent.~~

In that regard, it seems to us that much of the criticism of the executive order is, at root, misdirected criticism of the Supreme Court's decision. We find it extraordinary, for example, that much of the supposed expert public commentary on the President's order never mentions the Supreme Court's ruling, an omission that is especially ~~odd and unfair~~disappointing given that the President's order is expressly designed to implement and abide by the dictates of that Supreme Court decision.

Although a few of the order's critics have stated that the order precluded the release of presidential documents, that is simply false. The order merely sets up an orderly [and expeditious] procedure whereby both the sitting and the former president review documents requested for release to make the privilege determination. Moreover, as we have said, respectively, ~~T~~the fact that the order sets up procedures for former Presidents to assert their constitutionally guaranteed privileges does not mean that former Presidents must or should assert such privileges. In fact, the order expressly refrains from indicating whether and under what circumstances a former President should assert privileges. The order appropriately leaves that decision to the former President and his representatives in their discretion.

I am confident that, as the order is implemented, few records will be withheld from release. ~~The order also prominently notes the important historical fact that, e~~Even before the Presidential Records Act, former Presidents over time authorized release of the vast majority of their records. That is a critical practical point, for there surely is no reason to think that former Presidents would exercise their constitutional right to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than previous Presidents exercised their right to withhold all records.

Relatedly, we also want to emphaize that the single most important aspect of the President's executive order -- and its single biggest innovation -- is that the current President will defer "absent compelling circumstances" to the decision of the former President to authorize release of records. That provision of the order should largely remove the current President as a gatekeeper and impediment to release of the fomer President's records. This was a significant policy decision. When combined with the historical fact that former Presidents over time have authorized release of the vast majority of records, it becomes clear that the order is designed to -- and will -- help facilitate the expeditious release of Presidential records. We therefore believe it unfortunate ~~and quite troubling~~ that the President's order, which has largely removed a potentially major roadblock to release of Presidential records, has been characterized in precisely the opposite fashion, including by Members of Congress.

Let me turn next to some specific areas where ~~the order has been misdescribed~~which apparently require further clarification.

First, some have suggested that the order somehow alters the scope of "constitutionally based privileges" by expressly identifying attorney-client and work product privileges as subsumed within executive privilege. ~~In fact~~As we have previously explained to you, the order simply reiterates the long-standing position of the Executive Branch that executive privilege subsumes such attorney-client and work product records. We understand that some commentators disagree with the Executive Branch's traditional legal analysis on that point. But the order does not purport to resolve that debate because the order cannot and does not alter the scope of constitutionally based privileges. For example, if a former President seeks to withhold particular records by asserting a privilege that the courts subsequently determine not to be constitutionally based, then the courts will order disclosure of those records -- regardless whether that privilege was or was not identified in the executive order as being within the scope of executive privilege. As I previously communicted to you, we understand that there is a disagreement on this legal issue and that the question cannot be resolved in this executive order.

Second, some have suggested that the 21-day time frames established in the order for asserting privileges in response to congressional subpoenas may inappropriately override shorter subpoena return dates. That is incorrect. In the event of a legitimate and reasonable subpoena return date that is shorter than 21 days, the Executive Branch will respond within that time frame, if it ordinarily and otherwise would do so, without regard to the time frames in the executive order. The order simply sets out an outside ~~self-imposed~~ deadline (i) for asserting privileges in response to, inter alia, congressional requests other than subpoenas and (ii) for responding more expeditiously than otherwise might be required to congressional subpoenas.

Third, some have suggested that the order requires a requester of Presidential records to make some showing of "need" in order to request Presidential records. That is also incorrect. A requester need not make any showing of need to submit a request for Presidential records. If a former President asserts a privilege in response to a request, and the requester chooses to challenge that privilege claim in court, the requester only then must satisfy whatever standards the courts have established for executive privilege cases. The President's order, of course, could not and does not affect the standards the courts have established with respect to executive privilege claims. In any event, the important point for present purposes is that a requester need not make any showing of need when submitting a request for records.

There also have been some questions raised about the fact that a denied requester must initiate litigation against a former President who asserts a privilege, rather than requiring the former President to sue the current President and Archivist when asserting a privilege. Even assuming arguendo that it is constitutionally permissible to force a former President to sue the current President when asserting his constitutional privileges, we do not think such a procedure constitutionally appropriate or sound policy. The Supreme Court has held that former Presidents have the constitutional right to assert privileges over their records. If such a privilege is asserted, we believe it most appropriate for the requester who disagrees with the privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation -- not to require the former President take the extraordinary and jarring public step of suing the current President. In our view, the alternative procedure contained in the 1989 executive order would, as a practical matter, confuse the public and burden the former President's exercise of his constitutionally guaranteed rights in a manner inconsistent with the spirit, if not the letter, of the Supreme Court's decision guaranteeing the former President's rights.

As a practical matter, moreover, it is no more difficult for a requester to file suit when a former President asserts a privilege than for a denied requester to file an ordinary FOIA suit, which happens routinely. Because this procedure is so common in the FOIA setting, we think it an entirely appropriate model for these purposes, particularly given the countervailing considerations we have identified.

We hope these comments are of assistance to you and your colleagues. As I said, the President's order is designed to facilitate release of Presidential records in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court's case law and the Act. We ask, at a mimimum, that those who are ~~critical or skeptical~~concerned give this process a chance to operate before erroneously speculating how it will operate.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for your careful attention and devotion to these important issues. We look forward to working together with you on this and other issues in the future.

I like this version much better. I would suggest changing the word "crucial" to "needed" and adding one or two sentences on the legal procedures. I believe that Kristen Silverberg is working on this. I would urge everyone to send their changes in to Ed by noon, and then have Ed send to OMB for immediate circulation in their SAP process (with a short turnaround). We should have a final version ready by late this afternoon.

Thanks,

SECOND DRAFT

Senate SAP on Terrorism Risk Insurance

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program established in the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 is a well-crafted and effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program provides insurance companies with transparency in assessing their potential loss exposure while appropriately limiting that exposure and encouraging the private sector to build new capacity. It will aid the economy by dampening any increases in insurance costs or curtailment of insurance coverage while limiting federal intrusion into private activity.

The Administration urges Senate passage of the Senate-amended version of H.R. 3210 as a crucial step towards enactment of a terrorism risk insurance program. However, the Administration cannot support final enactment of the bill unless stronger procedures for terrorist-related litigation management are added in conference.

1ST SESSION

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

_____ introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To promote the stabilization of the economy by encouraging financial institutions to continue to support economic development, including development in urban areas, through the provision of affordable insurance coverage against acts of terrorism, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) property and casualty insurance firms are important financial institutions, the products of which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient use of financial resources and enhance the ability of the economy to maintain stability, while responding to a variety of economic, political, environmental, and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

(2) the ability of businesses and individuals to obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to economic growth, urban development, and the construction and maintenance of public and private housing, as well as to the promotion of United States exports and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected world;

(3) the ability of the insurance industry to cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by potential acts of terrorism in the United States can be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist attacks, while maintaining the stability of the economy;

(4) widespread financial market uncertainties have arisen following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, including the absence of information from which financial institutions can make statistically valid estimates of the probability and cost of future terrorist events, and therefore the size, funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by such acts of terrorism;

(5) a decision by property and casualty insurers to deal with such uncertainties, either by terminating property and casualty coverage for losses arising from terrorist events, or by radically escalating premium coverage to compensate for risks of loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously hamper ongoing and planned construction, property acquisition, and other business projects, generate a dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress economic activity; and

(6) the United States Government should provide temporary financial compensation to insured parties, contributing to the stabilization of the United States economy in a time of national crisis, while the financial services industry develops the systems, mechanisms, products, and programs necessary to create a viable financial services market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish a temporary Federal program that provides for a transparent system of shared public and private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, in order to—

(1) protect consumers by addressing market disruptions and ensure the continued widespread availability and affordability of property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

(2) allow for a transitional period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses, while preserving State insurance regulation and consumer protections.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

(A) CERTIFICATION.—The term ''act of terrorism'' means any act that is certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General of the United States—

(i) to be a violent act or an act that is dangerous to—

(I) human life;

(II) property; or

(III) infrastructure;

REV_00138026

(ii) to have resulted in damage within the United States, or outside the United States in the case of an air carrier described in paragraph (3)(A)(ii); and

(iii) to have been committed by an individual or individuals acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest, as part of an effort to coerce the civilian population of the United States or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the United States Government by coercion.

(B) LIMITATION.—No act or event shall be certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism if—

(i) the act or event is committed in the course of a war declared by the Congress; or

(ii) losses resulting from the act or event, in the aggregate, do not exceed $5,000,000.

(C) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any certification of, or determination not to certify, an act or event as an act of terrorism under this paragraph shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

REV_00138027

(2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE.—The term "business interruption coverage"—

(A) means coverage of losses for temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where—

(i) there is physical damage to the business premises of such magnitude that the business cannot open for business;

(ii) there is physical damage to other property that totally prevents customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; or

(iii) the Federal, State, or local government shuts down an area due to physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; and

(B) does not include lost profits, other than in the case of a small business concern (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations thereunder) in any case described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

REV_00138028

(3) INSURED LOSS.—The term ''insured loss''—

(A) means any loss resulting from an act of terrorism that is covered by primary property and casualty insurance, including business interruption coverage, issued by a participating insurance company, if such loss—

(i) occurs within the United States; or

(ii) occurs to an air carrier (as defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code), regardless of where the loss occurs; and

(B) excludes coverage under any life or health insurance.

(4) MARKET SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The ''market share'' of a participating insurance company shall be calculated using the total amount of gross property and casualty insurance premiums for the participating insurance company during the 2-year period preceding the year in which the subject act of terrorism occurred (or during such other period for which adequate data are available, as determined by the Secretary), as a percentage of the aggregate of all such property and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide during that period.

(B) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may adjust the market share of a participating insurance company under subparagraph (A), as necessary to reflect current market participation of that participating insurance company.

(5) NAIC.—The term "NAIC" means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY.—The term "participating insurance company" means any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate thereof—

(A) that—

(i) is licensed or admitted to engage in the business of providing primary insurance in any State, and was so licensed or admitted on September 11, 2001; or

(ii) is not licensed or admitted as described in clause (i), if it is an eligible surplus line carrier listed on the Quarterly Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC, or any successor thereto;

(B) that receives direct premiums for any type of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage or that, not later than 21 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submits written notification to the Secretary of its intent to participate in the Program with regard to personal lines of property and casualty insurance; and

REV_00138030

(C) that meets any other criteria that the Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

(7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DEDUCTIBLE.—The term ''participating insurance company deductible'' means—

(A) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002; and

(B) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2003, if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6.

(8) PERSON.—The term ''person'' means any individual, business or nonprofit entity (including those organized in the form of a partnership, limited liability company, corporation, or association), trust or estate, or a State or political subdivision of a State or other governmental unit.

(9) PROGRAM.—The term ''Program'' means the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program established by this Act.

(10) PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE.—The term ''property and casualty insurance''—

(A) means commercial lines of property and casualty insurance; and

(B) includes personal lines of property and casualty insurance, if a notification is made in accordance with paragraph (6)(B).

(11) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(12) STATE.—The term ''State'' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and each of the United States Virgin Islands.

REV_00138032

(13) UNITED STATES.—The term ''United States'' means all States of the United States.

SEC. 4. TERRORISM INSURED LOSS SHARED COMPENSATION PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Department of the Treasury the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program.

(2) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of State or Federal law, the Secretary shall administer the Program, and shall pay the Federal share of compensation for insured losses in accordance with subsection (e).

(b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—No payment may be made by the Secretary under subsection (e), unless—

(1) a person that suffers an insured loss, or a person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim with a participating insurance company;

(2) the participating insurance company provides clear and conspicuous disclosure to the policyholder of the premium charged for insured losses covered by the Program and the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program—

REV_00138033

(A) in the case of any policy covering an insured loss that is issued on or after the date of enactment of this Act, in the policy, at the time of offer, purchase, and renewal of the policy; and

(B) in the case of any policy that is issued before the date of enactment of this Act, not later than 90 days after that date of enactment;

(3) the participating insurance company processes the claim for the insured loss in accordance with its standard business practices, and any reasonable procedures that the Secretary may prescribe; and

(4) the participating insurance company submits to the Secretary, in accordance with such reasonable procedures as the Secretary may establish—

(A) a claim for payment of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program;

(B) written verification and certification—

(i) of the underlying claim; and

(ii) of all payments made for insured losses; and

(C) certification of its compliance with the provisions of this subsection.

REV_00138034

(c) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION; MANDATORY COVERAGE.—Each insurance company that meets the definition of a participating insurance company under section 3—

(1) shall participate in the Program;

(2) shall make available in all of its property and casualty insurance policies (in all of its participating lines), coverage for insured losses; and

(3) shall make available property and casualty insurance coverage for insured losses that does not differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from events other than acts of terrorism.

(d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES.—

(1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, establish procedures to allow participation in the Program by municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other entity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating through self insurance arrangements that were in existence on September 11, 2001, but only if the Secretary makes a determination with regard to participation by any such entity before the occurrence of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an insured loss.

(2) PARTICIPATION.—If the Secretary makes a determination to allow an entity described in paragraph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports, conditions, requirements, and standards established by this Act for participating insurance companies shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

(e) SHARED INSURANCE LOSS COVERAGE.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the cap on liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6), the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002—

(i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

REV_00138036

(II) does not exceed $10,000,000,000; and

(ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

(B) EXTENSION PERIOD.—If the Program is extended in accordance with section 6, the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2003, shall be calculated in accordance with clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6).

(C) PRO RATA SHARE.—If, during the period described in subparagraph (A) (or during the period described in subparagraph (B), if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall determine the pro rata share for each participating insurance company of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses calculated under subparagraph (A).

(2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), or any other provision of Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)—

(A) the Secretary shall not make any payment under this Act for any portion of the amount of such losses that exceeds $100,000,000,000; and

(B) participating insurance companies shall not be liable for the payment of any portion of the amount that exceeds $100,000,000,000.

(3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in any period described in paragraph (1), and the Congress shall determine the procedures for and the source of any such excess payments.

(4) FINAL NETTING.—The Secretary shall have sole discretion to determine the time at which claims relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall become final.

(5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—

(A) REDUCTION IN FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of compensation for insured losses incurred by a participating insurance company calculated under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the amount received under any agreement described in subparagraph (B)(i) in excess of the total amount of payments for such insured losses required to be made by the participating insurance company in accordance with this section.

(B) APPLICABILITY.—Subparagraph (A) shall apply only—

(i) if the participating insurance company had in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, an agreement that is a

REV_00138039

contractual arrangement for reimbursement of losses that are insured losses under the Program; and

(ii) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on the earlier of—

(I) the date on which the agreement is renewed or amended; or

(II) the first annual anniversary date of the agreement occurring after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF CLAIMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Program, including authority—

(1) to investigate and audit all claims under the Program; and

(2) to prescribe regulations and procedures to implement the Program.

(b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES.—The Secretary shall issue interim final rules or procedures specifying the manner in which—

(1) participating insurance companies may file, verify, and certify claims under the Program;

REV_00138040

(2) the Secretary shall publish or otherwise publicly announce the applicable percentage of insured losses that is the responsibility of participating insurance companies and the percentage that is the responsibility of the Federal Government under the Program;

(3) the Federal share of compensation for insured losses will be paid under the Program, including payments based on estimates of or actual aggregate insured losses;

(4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repayment from or reimburse any participating insurance company, based on estimates of insured losses under the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4;

(5) each participating insurance company that incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of insured losses, in accordance with section 4; and

company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4.

(c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS.—The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment made by the United States under the Program.

(d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may employ persons or contract for services as may be necessary to implement the Program.

(e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—The Secretary may assess civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act relating to the submission of false or misleading information for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority granted under this subsection shall continue during any period in which the Secretary's authority under section 6(d) is in effect.

SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EXTENSION.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2002, unless the Secretary—

REV_00138042

(A) determines, after considering the report and finding required by this section, that the Program should be extended for one additional year, until midnight on December 31, 2003; and

(B) promptly notifies the Congress of such determination and the reasons therefor.

(2) DETERMINATION FINAL.—The determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION.—If the Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2003.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress—

(1) regarding—

(A) the availability of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism;

(B) the affordability of such coverage, including the effect of such coverage on premiums; and

(C) the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb future losses resulting from acts of

REV_00138043

terrorism, taking into account the profitability of the insurance industry; and

(2) that considers—

(A) the impact of the Program on each of the factors described in paragraph (1); and

(B) the probable impact on such factors and on the United States economy if the Program terminates at midnight on December 31, 2002.

(c) FINDING REQUIRED.—A determination under subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on a finding by the Secretary that—

(1) widespread market uncertainties continue to disrupt the ability of insurance companies to price insurance coverage for losses resulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting in the continuing unavailability of affordable insurance for consumers; and

(2) extending the Program for an additional year would likely encourage economic stabilization and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Program under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reimbursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during the period in which the Program was in effect under this Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and regulations promulgated thereunder.

(e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This Act is repealed at midnight on the final termination date of the Program under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be construed—

(1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or causing to be taken, such actions under subsection (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5), 5(a)(1), 5(c), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day before the date of such repeal), and applicable regulations promulgated thereunder, during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect; or

(2) to prevent the availability of funding under section 10(b) during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect.

(f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary should make any determination under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable participating insurance companies to include coverage for acts of terrorism in their policies for 2003.

(g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PROGRAM.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the insurance field, shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(h) REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE PREMIUMS.—

(1) REPORT TO THE NAIC.—Beginning 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, each participating insurance company shall submit a report to the NAIC that states the premium rates charged by that participating insurance company during the preceding 6-month period for insured losses covered by the Program, and includes an explanation of and justification for those rates.

REV_00138046

(2) REPORTS FORWARDED.—The NAIC shall promptly forward copies of each report submitted under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Comptroller General of the United States.

(3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint reports to Congress and the Comptroller General of the United States summarizing and evaluating the reports forwarded under paragraph (2).

(B) TIMING.—The reports required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted—

(i) 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(ii) 12 months after the date of submission of the first report under clause (i).

(4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

(A) EVALUATION.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall evaluate each report submitted under paragraph (3), and upon request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the Comptroller all documents, records, and any other information that the Comptroller deems necessary to carry out such evaluation.

REV_00138047

(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after receipt of each report submitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report of the evaluation required by subparagraph (A).

SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State over any participating insurance company or other person—

(1) except as specifically provided in this Act; and

(2) except that—

consistent with that definition, to the extent that such provision of law would otherwise apply to any type of insurance covered by this Act;

(B) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002, rates for terrorism risk insurance covered by this Act and filed with any State shall not be subject to prior approval or a waiting period, under any law of a State that would otherwise be applicable, except that nothing in this Act affects the ability of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

(C) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and for so long as the Program is in effect, as provided in section 6 (including any period during which the authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is in effect), books and records of any participating insurance company that are relevant to the Program shall be provided, or caused to be provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or such designee, notwithstanding any provision of the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting such access.

SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY BUILDING.

It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance industry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for terrorism risk.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Program, to remain available until expended.

(b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.—This Act constitutes payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program.

SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).

(b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for decision in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

(1) the law, including choice of law principles, of another State is determined to be applicable to the action by the district court hearing the action; or

(2) otherwise applicable State law (including that determined pursuant to paragraph (1)), is inconsistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal law.

(c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attributable to punitive damages shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this Act.

(d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

RE: SENATE VERSION OF TERRORISM REINSURANCE LEGISLATION

We have obtained a draft of the version of the "Terrorism Risk Protection Act" that has been proposed as a consensus compromise bill and is currently circulating in the Senate. (See Section 10 of the bill, attached). We believe that there is a great need for a terrorism reinsurance bill, and that some compromises will have to be made in order to get the bill passed before the end of the year. We have serious concerns, however, regarding the litigation management provisions in the bill. Not only are the President's four civil justice reforms not included in this bill, but the litigation management provisions that are included may actually be harmful to the business community.

The consensus compromise bill may be voted on as early as Wednesday, December 19. The House bill contains the principal civil justice reforms recommended by the President, and does not contain some of the problems that we will outline in this memorandum. Assuming that the Senate bill passes as is, corrective action may be possible when the bill goes to the House and Senate Conference Committee, which will have the burden of reconciling the House and Senate bills.

1. Federal Cause of Action May Not Apply to All Claims.

Section 10(a) of the bill creates a federal cause of action for "property damage, personal injury, or death, arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism." The bill does not create a federal cause of action for direct or indirect economic losses arising out of an act of terrorism. For example, if anthrax were released in a place of business, the owner of that business might have to shut down his business for a few weeks, or even months. The owner would have direct and indirect economic losses, but there might not be any property damage. Therefore, claims for economic losses, if available under state law, would not be pre-empted by this section. Claimants could pursue these claims for damages under state law in state court.

2. Federal Cause of Action Will Not Ensure that Claims Are Brought in Federal Court.

Unlike the House Terrorism Risk Protection Act, which states that the federal district courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction for all of the claims arising out of the act, the Senate bill does not state that federal courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction for claims brought under the act. Therefore, although a federal cause of action is created by the bill, nothing in the bill would prevent state courts from hearing the federal claims that arise under the bill. Litigation under prior acts of Congress that have created a federal cause of action, such as the Federal Employers' Liability Act,[1] demonstrates that federal claims may be brought in either state or federal court.

3. Punitive Damages Provision Does Not Help-and May Hurt Some Insureds.

Section 10(c) of the bill states that any amounts that are awarded in a civil action due to punitive damages do not count as insured losses for the purposes of this act. In twenty-two states, the law does not permit insurers to insure against punitive damages. In the other twenty-eight states, however, this section would create a disincentive for reinsurers to include punitive damages coverage in their policies. The principle underlying this legislation is that in the event of a terrorist attack, after reinsurers have sustained a certain level of loss, the government will step in and help the reinsurer deal with additional losses. According to this section, however, if those losses result from punitive damages awards, then the losses do not "count" in helping the reinsurer reach the loss level necessary for federal assistance. In other words, under this section, an insurer could pay out billions of dollars in losses due to a terrorist event and never become eligible for federal assistance if the losses result from punitive damages. Because the section does not provide any protection for losses resulting from punitive damages awards, most reinsurers will choose not to include punitive damages in the policies that they issue if this section of the bill is included in the final legislation. This will directly hurt and affect insureds.

Conclusion

Based upon the above analysis, we believe that the litigation management provisions in this bill will have a negative result for the business community. As indicated in the beginning of this memorandum, we understand that the consensus compromise bill is for Senate action only. If you have any information to the contrary, please let us know immediately. There may be an opportunity when the bill is before the Conference Committee to make changes to eliminate the negative aspects of the bill described above and also to include at least modest civil justice reforms such as case consolidation in federal court and punitive damages reform.

We will be working toward these goals and if we can be of any assistance to you in pursuing them, please let us know tomorrow. Victor can be reached at (202) 662-4886 or through e-mail at vschwartz@shb.com. Tiger can be reached at (202) 682-1163 or through e-mail sjoyce@atra.com.

DRAFT - NOT FOR RELEASE

December 19, 2001
(Senate)

H.R. 3210 - Terrorism Risk Protection Act
(Rep. Oxley (R) Ohio and 35 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program established in the proposed Senate version of H.R. 3210 is a well-crafted and effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program provides insurance companies with transparency in assessing their potential loss exposure while appropriately limiting that exposure and encouraging the private sector to build new capacity. It will aid the economy by dampening any increases in insurance costs or curtailment of insurance coverage while limiting federal intrusion into private activity.

The Administration urges Senate passage of the proposed Senate version of H.R. 3210 as a needed step towards enactment of a terrorism risk insurance program. However, the Administration cannot support final enactment of the bill unless stronger procedures for terrorist-related litigation management are added in conference. Reasonable litigation management procedures are an essential element of any terrorism insurance bill. For many companies facing rising insurance premiums, the increased costs result almost entirely from the risk of litigation. In addition, the federal program exposes taxpayer dollars, and litigation management procedures are therefore necessary to manage excessive and unnecessary costs resulting from litigation. Finally, litigation procedures will ensure an orderly process that will help resolve claims more expeditiously and thereby benefit plaintiffs and defendants alike.

1ST SESSION

S. _____

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

_____ introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To promote the stabilization of the economy by encouraging financial institutions to continue to support economic development, including development in urban areas, through the provision of affordable insurance coverage against acts of terrorism, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) property and casualty insurance firms are important financial institutions, the products of which allow mutualization of risk and the efficient use of financial resources and enhance the ability of the economy to maintain stability, while responding to a variety of economic, political, environmental, and other risks with a minimum of disruption;

(2) the ability of businesses and individuals to obtain property and casualty insurance at reasonable and predictable prices, in order to spread the risk of both routine and catastrophic loss, is critical to economic growth, urban development, and the construction and maintenance of public and private housing, as well as to the promotion of United States exports and foreign trade in an increasingly interconnected world;

(3) the ability of the insurance industry to cover the unprecedented financial risks presented by potential acts of terrorism in the United States can be a major factor in the recovery from terrorist attacks, while maintaining the stability of the economy;

(4) widespread financial market uncertainties have arisen following the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, including the absence of information from which financial institutions can make statistically valid estimates of the probability and cost of future terrorist events, and therefore the size, funding, and allocation of the risk of loss caused by such acts of terrorism;

(5) a decision by property and casualty insurers to deal with such uncertainties, either by terminating property and casualty coverage for losses arising from terrorist events, or by radically escalating premium coverage to compensate for risks of loss that are not readily predictable, could seriously hamper ongoing and planned construction, property acquisition, and other business projects, generate a dramatic increase in rents, and otherwise suppress economic activity; and

(6) the United States Government should provide temporary financial compensation to insured parties, contributing to the stabilization of the United States economy in a time of national crisis, while the financial services industry develops the systems, mechanisms, products, and programs necessary to create a viable financial services market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to establish a temporary Federal program that provides for a transparent system of shared public and private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism, in order to—

(1) protect consumers by addressing market disruptions and ensure the continued widespread availability and affordability of property and casualty insurance for terrorism risk; and

(2) allow for a transitional period for the private markets to stabilize, resume pricing of such insurance, and build capacity to absorb any future losses, while preserving State insurance regulation and consumer protections.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) ACT OF TERRORISM.—

(A) CERTIFICATION.—The term ''act of terrorism'' means any act that is certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General of the United States—

(i) to be a violent act or an act that is dangerous to—

(I) human life;

(II) property; or

(III) infrastructure;

REV_00138137

(ii) to have resulted in damage within the United States, or outside the United States in the case of an air carrier described in paragraph (3)(A)(ii); and

(iii) to have been committed by an individual or individuals acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest, as part of an effort to coerce the civilian population of the United States or to influence the policy or affect the conduct of the United States Government by coercion.

(B) LIMITATION.—No act or event shall be certified by the Secretary as an act of terrorism if—

(i) the act or event is committed in the course of a war declared by the Congress; or

(ii) losses resulting from the act or event, in the aggregate, do not exceed $5,000,000.

(C) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any certification of, or determination not to certify, an act or event as an act of terrorism under this paragraph shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

REV_00138138

(2) BUSINESS INTERRUPTION COVERAGE.—The term "business interruption coverage"—

(A) means coverage of losses for temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where—

(i) there is physical damage to the business premises of such magnitude that the business cannot open for business;

(ii) there is physical damage to other property that totally prevents customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; or

(iii) the Federal, State, or local government shuts down an area due to physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing customers or employees from gaining access to the business premises; and

(B) does not include lost profits, other than in the case of a small business concern (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632) and applicable regulations thereunder) in any case described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

REV_00138139

(3) INSURED LOSS.—The term ''insured loss''—

(A) means any loss resulting from an act of terrorism that is covered by primary property and casualty insurance, including business interruption coverage, issued by a participating insurance company, if such loss—

(i) occurs within the United States; or

(ii) occurs to an air carrier (as defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code), regardless of where the loss occurs; and

(B) excludes coverage under any life or health insurance.

(4) MARKET SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The ''market share'' of a participating insurance company shall be calculated using the total amount of gross property and casualty insurance premiums for the participating insurance company during the 2-year period preceding the year in which the subject act of terrorism occurred (or during such other period for which adequate data are available, as determined by the Secretary), as a percentage of the aggregate of all such property and casualty insurance premiums industry-wide during that period.

(B) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may adjust the market share of a participating insurance company under subparagraph (A), as necessary to reflect current market participation of that participating insurance company.

(5) NAIC.—The term "NAIC" means the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

(6) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY.—The term "participating insurance company" means any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate thereof—

(A) that—

(i) is licensed or admitted to engage in the business of providing primary insurance in any State, and was so licensed or admitted on September 11, 2001; or

(ii) is not licensed or admitted as described in clause (i), if it is an eligible surplus line carrier listed on the Quarterly Listing of Alien Insurers of the NAIC, or any successor thereto;

(B) that receives direct premiums for any type of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage or that, not later than 21 days after the date of enactment of this Act, submits written notification to the Secretary of its intent to participate in the Program with regard to personal lines of property and casualty insurance; and

REV_00138141

(C) that meets any other criteria that the Secretary may reasonably prescribe.

(7) PARTICIPATING INSURANCE COMPANY DEDUCTIBLE.—The term ''participating insurance company deductible'' means—

(A) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $10,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002; and

(B) a participating insurance company's market share, multiplied by $15,000,000,000, with respect to insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2003, if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6.

(8) PERSON.—The term ''person'' means any individual, business or nonprofit entity (including those organized in the form of a partnership, limited liability company, corporation, or association), trust or estate, or a State or political subdivision of a State or other governmental unit.

(9) PROGRAM.—The term ''Program'' means the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program established by this Act.

(10) PROPERTY AND CASUALTY INSURANCE.—The term ''property and casualty insurance''—

(A) means commercial lines of property and casualty insurance; and

(B) includes personal lines of property and casualty insurance, if a notification is made in accordance with paragraph (6)(B).

(11) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Treasury.

(12) STATE.—The term ''State'' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and each of the United States Virgin Islands.

REV_00138143

(13) UNITED STATES.—The term ''United States'' means all States of the United States.

SEC. 4. TERRORISM INSURED LOSS SHARED COMPENSATION PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Department of the Treasury the Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program.

(2) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of State or Federal law, the Secretary shall administer the Program, and shall pay the Federal share of compensation for insured losses in accordance with subsection (e).

(b) CONDITIONS FOR FEDERAL PAYMENTS.—No payment may be made by the Secretary under subsection (e), unless—

(1) a person that suffers an insured loss, or a person acting on behalf of that person, files a claim with a participating insurance company;

(2) the participating insurance company provides clear and conspicuous disclosure to the policyholder of the premium charged for insured losses covered by the Program and the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program—

REV_00138144

(A) in the case of any policy covering an insured loss that is issued on or after the date of enactment of this Act, in the policy, at the time of offer, purchase, and renewal of the policy; and

(B) in the case of any policy that is issued before the date of enactment of this Act, not later than 90 days after that date of enactment;

(3) the participating insurance company processes the claim for the insured loss in accordance with its standard business practices, and any reasonable procedures that the Secretary may prescribe; and

(4) the participating insurance company submits to the Secretary, in accordance with such reasonable procedures as the Secretary may establish—

(A) a claim for payment of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program;

(B) written verification and certification—

(i) of the underlying claim; and

(ii) of all payments made for insured losses; and

(C) certification of its compliance with the provisions of this subsection.

REV_00138145

(c) MANDATORY PARTICIPATION; MANDATORY COVERAGE.—Each insurance company that meets the definition of a participating insurance company under section 3—

(1) shall participate in the Program;

(2) shall make available in all of its property and casualty insurance policies (in all of its participating lines), coverage for insured losses; and

(3) shall make available property and casualty insurance coverage for insured losses that does not differ materially from the terms, amounts, and other coverage limitations applicable to losses arising from events other than acts of terrorism.

(d) PARTICIPATION BY SELF INSURED ENTITIES.—

(1) DETERMINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary may, in consultation with the NAIC, establish procedures to allow participation in the Program by municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities (and by any other entity, as the Secretary deems appropriate) operating through self insurance arrangements that were in existence on September 11, 2001, but only if the Secretary makes a determination with regard to participation by any such entity before the occurrence of an act of terrorism in which the entity incurs an insured loss.

(2) PARTICIPATION.—If the Secretary makes a determination to allow an entity described in paragraph (1) to participate in the Program, all reports, conditions, requirements, and standards established by this Act for participating insurance companies shall apply to any such entity, as determined to be appropriate by the Secretary.

(e) SHARED INSURANCE LOSS COVERAGE.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the cap on liability under paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6), the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002—

(i) shall be equal to 80 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required

REV_00138147

to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) does not exceed $10,000,000,000; and

(ii) shall be equal to 90 percent of that portion of the amount of aggregate insured losses that—

(I) exceeds the participating insurance company deductibles required to be paid for those insured losses; and

(II) exceeds $10,000,000,000.

(B) EXTENSION PERIOD.—If the Program is extended in accordance with section 6, the Federal share of compensation under the Program to be paid by the Secretary for insured losses resulting from an act of terrorism occurring during the period beginning on January 1, 2003 and ending at midnight on December 31, 2003, shall be calculated in accordance with clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), subject to the cap on liability in paragraph (2) and the limitation under paragraph (6).

(C) PRO RATA SHARE.—If, during the period described in subparagraph (A) (or during the period described in subparagraph (B), if the Program is extended in accordance with section 6), the aggregate insured losses for that period exceed $10,000,000,000, the Secretary shall determine the pro rata share for each participating insurance company of the Federal share of compensation for insured losses calculated under subparagraph (A).

(2) CAP ON ANNUAL LIABILITY.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), or any other provision of Federal or State law, if the aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 during any period referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)—

(A) the Secretary shall not make any payment under this Act for any portion of the amount of such losses that exceeds $100,000,000,000; and

(B) participating insurance companies shall not be liable for the payment of any portion of the amount that exceeds $100,000,000,000.

(3) NOTICE TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall notify the Congress if estimated or actual aggregate insured losses exceed $100,000,000,000 in any period described in paragraph (1), and the Congress shall determine the procedures for and the source of any such excess payments.

(4) FINAL NETTING.—The Secretary shall have sole discretion to determine the time at which claims relating to any insured loss or act of terrorism shall become final.

(5) DETERMINATIONS FINAL.—Any determination of the Secretary under this subsection shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(6) IN-FORCE REINSURANCE AGREEMENTS.—

(A) REDUCTION IN FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of compensation for insured losses incurred by a participating insurance company calculated under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the amount received under any agreement described in subparagraph (B)(i) in excess of the total amount of payments for such insured losses required to be made by the participating insurance company in accordance with this section.

(B) APPLICABILITY.—Subparagraph (A) shall apply only—

(i) if the participating insurance company had in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, an agreement that is a

REV_00138150

contractual arrangement for reimbursement of losses that are insured losses under the Program; and

(ii) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending on the earlier of—

(I) the date on which the agreement is renewed or amended; or

(II) the first annual anniversary date of the agreement occurring after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. GENERAL AUTHORITY AND ADMINISTRATION OF CLAIMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall have the powers and authorities necessary to carry out the Program, including authority—

(1) to investigate and audit all claims under the Program; and

(2) to prescribe regulations and procedures to implement the Program.

(b) INTERIM RULES AND PROCEDURES.—The Secretary shall issue interim final rules or procedures specifying the manner in which—

(1) participating insurance companies may file, verify, and certify claims under the Program;

REV_00138151

(2) the Secretary shall publish or otherwise publicly announce the applicable percentage of insured losses that is the responsibility of participating insurance companies and the percentage that is the responsibility of the Federal Government under the Program;

(3) the Federal share of compensation for insured losses will be paid under the Program, including payments based on estimates of or actual aggregate insured losses;

(4) the Secretary may, at any time, seek repayment from or reimburse any participating insurance company, based on estimates of insured losses under the Program, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4;

(5) each participating insurance company that incurs insured losses shall pay its pro rata share of insured losses, in accordance with section 4; and

company, to effectuate the insured loss sharing provisions contained in section 4.

(c) SUBROGATION RIGHTS.—The United States shall have the right of subrogation with respect to any payment made by the United States under the Program.

(d) CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may employ persons or contract for services as may be necessary to implement the Program.

(e) CIVIL PENALTIES.—The Secretary may assess civil money penalties for violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, or order issued by the Secretary under this Act relating to the submission of false or misleading information for purposes of the Program, or any failure to repay any amount required to be reimbursed under regulations or procedures described in section 5(b). The authority granted under this subsection shall continue during any period in which the Secretary's authority under section 6(d) is in effect.

SEC. 6. TERMINATION OF PROGRAM; DISCRETIONARY EXTENSION.

(a) TERMINATION OF PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2002, unless the Secretary—

REV_00138153

(A) determines, after considering the report and finding required by this section, that the Program should be extended for one additional year, until midnight on December 31, 2003; and

(B) promptly notifies the Congress of such determination and the reasons therefor.

(2) DETERMINATION FINAL.—The determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be final, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(3) TERMINATION AFTER EXTENSION.—If the Program is extended under paragraph (1), the Program shall terminate at midnight on December 31, 2003.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress—

(1) regarding—

(A) the availability of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism;

(B) the affordability of such coverage, including the effect of such coverage on premiums; and

(C) the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb future losses resulting from acts of

REV_00138154

terrorism, taking into account the profitability of the insurance industry; and

(2) that considers—

(A) the impact of the Program on each of the factors described in paragraph (1); and

(B) the probable impact on such factors and on the United States economy if the Program terminates at midnight on December 31, 2002.

(c) FINDING REQUIRED.—A determination under subsection (a) to extend the Program shall be based on a finding by the Secretary that—

(1) widespread market uncertainties continue to disrupt the ability of insurance companies to price insurance coverage for losses resulting from acts of terrorism, thereby resulting in the continuing unavailability of affordable insurance for consumers; and

(2) extending the Program for an additional year would likely encourage economic stabilization and facilitate a transition to a viable market for private terrorism risk insurance.

(d) CONTINUING AUTHORITY TO PAY OR ADJUST COMPENSATION.—Following the termination of the Program under subsection (a), the Secretary may take such actions as may be necessary to ensure payment, reimbursement, or adjustment of compensation for insured losses arising out of any act of terrorism occurring during the period in which the Program was in effect under this Act, in accordance with the provisions of section 4 and regulations promulgated thereunder.

(e) REPEAL; SAVINGS CLAUSE.—This Act is repealed at midnight on the final termination date of the Program under subsection (a), except that such repeal shall not be construed—

(1) to prevent the Secretary from taking, or causing to be taken, such actions under subsection (d) of this section and sections 4(e)(4), 4(e)(5), 5(a)(1), 5(c), and 5(e) (as in effect on the day before the date of such repeal), and applicable regulations promulgated thereunder, during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect; or

(2) to prevent the availability of funding under section 10(b) during any period in which the authority of the Secretary under subsection (d) of this section is in effect.

(f) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary should make any determination under subsection (a) in sufficient time to enable participating insurance companies to include coverage for acts of terrorism in their policies for 2003.

(g) STUDY AND REPORT ON SCOPE OF THE PROGRAM.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary, after consultation with the NAIC, representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the insurance field, shall conduct a study of the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress on the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(h) REPORTS REGARDING TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE PREMIUMS.—

(1) REPORT TO THE NAIC.—Beginning 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter, each participating insurance company shall submit a report to the NAIC that states the premium rates charged by that participating insurance company during the preceding 6-month period for insured losses covered by the Program, and includes an explanation of and justification for those rates.

REV_00138157

(2) REPORTS FORWARDED.—The NAIC shall promptly forward copies of each report submitted under paragraph (1) to the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Comptroller General of the United States.

(3) AGENCY REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission shall submit joint reports to Congress and the Comptroller General of the United States summarizing and evaluating the reports forwarded under paragraph (2).

(B) TIMING.—The reports required under subparagraph (A) shall be submitted—

(i) 9 months after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(ii) 12 months after the date of submission of the first report under clause (i).

(4) GAO EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

(A) EVALUATION.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall evaluate each report submitted under paragraph (3), and upon request, the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the NAIC shall provide to the Comptroller all documents, records, and any other information that the Comptroller deems necessary to carry out such evaluation.

REV_00138158

(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after receipt of each report submitted under paragraph (3), the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report of the evaluation required by subparagraph (A).

SEC. 7. PRESERVATION OF STATE LAW.

Nothing in this Act shall affect the jurisdiction or regulatory authority of the insurance commissioner (or any agency or office performing like functions) of any State over any participating insurance company or other person—

(1) except as specifically provided in this Act; and

(2) except that—

consistent with that definition, to the extent that such provision of law would otherwise apply to any type of insurance covered by this Act;

(B) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and ending at midnight on December 31, 2002, rates for terrorism risk insurance covered by this Act and filed with any State shall not be subject to prior approval or a waiting period, under any law of a State that would otherwise be applicable, except that nothing in this Act affects the ability of any State to invalidate a rate as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory; and

(C) during the period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act and for so long as the Program is in effect, as provided in section 6 (including any period during which the authority of the Secretary under section 6(d) is in effect), books and records of any participating insurance company that are relevant to the Program shall be provided, or caused to be provided, to the Secretary or the designee of the Secretary, upon request by the Secretary or such designee, notwithstanding any provision of the laws of any State prohibiting or limiting such access.

SEC. 8. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING CAPACITY BUILDING.

It is the sense of the Congress that the insurance industry should build capacity and aggregate risk to provide affordable property and casualty insurance coverage for terrorism risk.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; PAYMENT AUTHORITY.

(a) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for administrative expenses of the Program, to remain available until expended.

(b) PAYMENT AUTHORITY.—This Act constitutes payment authority in advance of appropriation Acts, and represents the obligation of the Federal Government to provide for the Federal share of compensation for insured losses under the Program.

SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal cause of action for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for claims for such property damage, personal injury, or death, except as provided in subsection (d).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All State causes of action of any kind for property damage, personal injury, or death arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (d).

(b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for decision in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

(1) the law, including choice of law principles, of another State is determined to be applicable to the action by the district court hearing the action; or

(2) otherwise applicable State law (including that determined pursuant to paragraph (1)), is inconsistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal law.

(c) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.—Any amounts awarded in a civil action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attributable to punitive damages shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this Act.

(d) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

(e) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including, if applicable, any extension period provided for under section 6.

Marshall has just heard from DOJ. They've informed him that they have three offices (Legal Counsel, Legal Policy, and Civil Division) that need to review the SAP and will not be able to review it tonight. I need a consensus from you all that we either: 1) Wait for them until tomorrow- and not have the SAP ready for when they begin consideration (Matt, is the plan still that they will proceed to consideration tomorrow?), or 2) Marshall gets comments from the remaining agencies and gives me the SAP for WH Clearance and we attempt to incorporate any edits that DOJ may have tomorrow morning, or 3) Someone calls Dan Bryant and tells him we need their comments (or at least his sign off) tonight no matter what else they have going on and if he says he can't do it, we tell him that we have to go ahead without him. Please advise.

President Bush recently signed an Executive Order to ~~further~~ implement the 1978 Presidential Records Act, which establishes a process by which documents of former Presidents are reviewed and released. Freedom and openness lie at the core of our government, and President Bush's executive order ensures the expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars and the public valuable insight into the way our government works. The order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also ~~drawing upon sound legal policy to~~ respecting the constitutional rights of former Presidents.

Consistent with his~~the President's~~ order, the President (?) has today authorized the National Archives and Records Administration ~~today has been authorized~~ to publicly release thousands of pages of records belonging to former President Reagan. These documents represent all that have been forwarded to the Administration thus far from the Reagan Library. This release ~~, and~~ is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former Presidents, including otherwise privileged records, following the clear steps in President Bush's new order.

Critics have irresponsibly alleged that the recent executive order was intended to prevent access to Presidential papers . Today's~~This~~ release and the anticipated release of thousands of additional pages in the very near future demonstrate that the Bush administration is committed to the appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records. ~~despite allegations by critics that the recent executive order was intended to prevent access to Presidential papers~~.

~~At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that it is necessary that they remain confidential. In some cases, documents could jeopardize our current national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not jeopardize American lives. In such situations the current President and former Presidents may assert constitutionally based privileges over Presidential records. While the executive order says nothing about whether and under what circumstances a privilege may be asserted, it does recognize the role that former Presidents play.~~ Some have been critical of the order's inclusion of former Presidents in this process, but former Presidents have the right to assert executive privilege based on Supreme Court precedent and the Presidential Records Act itself.

The Supreme Court, in its landmark 1977 Nixon v. GSA decision written by Justice William Brennan, definitively held that the Constitution guarantees former Presidents the right to assert privileges over their records. Additionally, the Presidential Records Act provides for the release of documents after 12 years from the end of the President's term, but expressly provides that former Presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over their Presidential records after the twelve year period expires. Indeed~~Thus~~, the Presidential Records Act would be ~~deemed~~ unconstitutional if it did not allow former Presidents to assert available privileges over their records.

Throughout history Presidents have taken steps over time to release the vast majority of their records. Before the Presidential Records Act was enacted, former Presidents enjoyed complete control over their Presidential records. Even without a legal requirement, former Presidents have chosen to provide their papers for historical study, and millions of people who have visited the Kennedy, Ford or Carter Libraries, for example, have taken advantage of the rich and valuable array of historical materials that have been made available.

President Bush expects that this tradition will continue. The value of Presidential records and the principles of openness and access that their release represents are respected by President Bush and are no doubt just as important to the former Presidents whose papers will be subject to the Presidential Records Act. There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former Presidents subject to the Presidential Records Act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than earlier Presidents. We are confident that, over time, the vast majority of Presidential records -- including otherwise privileged records -- will be made available to the public as they should.

By providing ~~A significant policy decision was made~~ that "absent compelling circumstances" the current President will defer to the decision of the former President to authorize release of records, the order~~. This provision~~ largely removes a sitting President as a potential impediment to release of a former President's records. When combined with the historical fact that former Presidents over time have authorized release of the vast majority of records, it is clear that President Bush's order ~~intended to and the order and~~ will help facilitate the expeditious release of Presidential records.

If a former President should choose to assert privilege over a sensitive record, a requester may challenge the privilege claim in court. Such proceedings are routine when there is disagreement about the release of Executive Branch records under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). The argument that the burden should lie with the former President would require the awkward situation of a former President being forced to sue the current President. That suggestion is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy. It is far more appropriate and sensible to require the requester who disagrees with the former President's privilege assertion to proceed to court -- just as the requester would do in ordinary FOIA litigation.

For months, there have been skeptics who have wrongly questioned President Bush's motives in establishing sensible procedures for the review of Presidential records. The President's order faithfully implements the requirements of the Constitution and the Presidential Records Act. Today's action authorizing the initial release of thousands of pages of privileged records from President Reagan's library shows that the skeptics were wrong and that President Bush's executive order can and will work as intended: to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of Presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the Act.

Subject: FINAL CLEARANCE- SAP, H.R. 3210-Terrorism Risk Insurance Protection Act (Senate substitute)

Here is the final version of the SAP on H.R. 3210, for your clearance. The SAP is written to reflect Sen. Daschle's proposed substitute amendment (not the House version of the bill). The bill is scheduled to be considered on the floor at some point after 12:00 pm tomorrow. Therefore, please respond to me with your comments/clearance, by 11:00 am tomorrow, Wednesday, December 19th. If you have any questions, please call me.
Thanks,

DRAFT - NOT FOR RELEASE

December 19, 2001

(Senate)

H.R. 3210 - Terrorism Risk Protection Act
(Rep. Oxley (R) Ohio and 35 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will help provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program established in the proposed Senate version of H.R. 3210 is a well-crafted and effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program provides insurance companies with transparency in assessing their potential loss exposure while appropriately limiting that exposure and encouraging the private sector to build new capacity. It will aid the economy by dampening any increases in insurance costs or curtailment of insurance coverage while limiting federal intrusion into private activity.

The Administration urges Senate passage of the proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 3210 as a needed step towards enactment of a terrorism risk insurance program. However, the Administration cannot support final enactment of the bill unless stronger procedures for terrorist-related litigation management are added in conference. Reasonable litigation management procedures are an essential element of any terrorism insurance bill. For many companies facing rising insurance, a significant part of the increased costs results from the risk of litigation. In addition, the federal program exposes taxpayer dollars, and litigation management procedures are therefore necessary to manage excessive and unnecessary costs resulting from litigation. Finally, litigation procedures will ensure an orderly process that will help resolve claims more expeditiously and thereby benefit plaintiffs and defendants alike. Section 6(h) of the Senate substitute relating to Comptroller General access to information would be construed in a manner consistent with constitutional provisions relating to the separation of powers. Section 10 of the Senate substitute does not, and should not, affect existing U.S. law regarding the immunities of foreign sovereigns.

Administration Position to Date

The Administration has not taken a position on the Senate version of H.R. 3210.

On November 28, 2001, a SAP on H.R. 3210, the "Terrorism Risk Protection Act" was sent to the House Rules Committee. The SAP urged prompt passage of H.R. 3210 "as a step toward enactment of legislation to ensure the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts." H.R. 3210 included provisions that limited terrorist-related litigation. The SAP expressed the Administration's concern with the repayment assessment mechanism and the administrative complexities of H.R. 3210 as a whole. The SAP also stated that "procedures for consolidation and management of mass tort litigation arising out of a terrorism incident are a necessary part of any meaningful terrorism insurance proposal, and thus a necessary condition for Administration support of any terrorism insurance bill."

Summary of Senate Manager's Amendment to H.R. 3210

The following summary is based on a draft of a manager's amendment that Treasury staff believe will be offered as a substitute for the House passed version of H.R. 3210.

The amendment would establish a temporary "Terrorism Insured Loss Shared Compensation Program" (Program) within the Department of the Treasury intended to ensure the continued availability of commercial property and casualty insurance and reinsurance for terrorism-related risks. The amendment would provide for Federal assistance for future terrorism damage if it reaches certain levels. That amount would be based on a formula, which is market share multiplied by $10 billion in the first year, and market share multiplied by $15 billion in the optional second year. For losses above this "retention level," the cost of terrorism losses would be shared. The Federal government would pay for approximately 80 percent of insurance losses below $10 billion, with the industry paying 20 percent. For losses between $10 billion and $100 billion, the split would be 90-10. The amendment would provide authority for one year to pay for certain property and casualty losses resulting from a terrorist attack; the authority could be extended for a second year.

Authority of the Secretary of the Treasury. The amendment would make the Secretary of the Treasury responsible for carrying out the program for financial assistance for commercial property and casualty insurers that would be established by the bill. The Secretary could extend the Program an additional year, expiring on December 31, 2003.

Triggering Determination and Federal Cost-Sharing for Commercial Insurers. Under the amendment, Federal financial assistance would be triggered by a determination of the Secretary that the insured losses resulting from the event of an act of terrorism occurring during the covered period, or the aggregate insured losses resulting from multiple events of acts of terrorism all occurring during the covered period. The Secretary would have the sole authority for determining whether an occurrence or event was caused by an act of terrorism, whether insured losses from acts of terrorism were caused by one or multiple events or occurrences, and whether an act of terrorism occurred during the covered period.

The amount of Federal assistance would be based on a formula, which is the "market share" of a participating insurance company (total amount of gross property and casualty insurance premiums during the 2-year period preceding the year in which the act of terrorism occurred, as a percentage of the aggregate of all industry wide premiums) multiplied by $10 billion in the first year, and market share multiplied by $15 billion in the optional second year. For losses above the "insurance company's deductible," the cost of terrorism losses would be shared. The Federal government would pay for approximately 80 percent of insurance losses below $10 billion, with the industry paying 20 percent. For losses between $10 billion and $100 billion, the split would be 90-10. The amendment would provide authority for one year to pay for certain property and casualty losses resulting from a terrorist attack; the authority could be extended for a second year. The aggregate amount of financial assistance provided could not exceed $100 billion.

Sovereign Immunity Protections. Whenever Federal financial assistance is triggered (i.e., whenever an act of terrorism occurs), the amendment would provide for a Federal cause of action which would be the exclusive remedy for damages claimed pursuant to any acts of terrorism that caused the insured losses. These cases would be governed by the law of the State in which the act of terrorism occurred, unless such law is inconsistent with or preempted by Federal law. Under the amendment, the plaintiff may seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

Extension of Program. The Secretary could, upon making a determination that an extension of the provisions of the bill is necessary to ensure the adequate availability in the United States of commercial property and casualty insurance coverage for acts of terrorism, extend the period in which these provisions apply to a date no later than December 31, 2003.

State Preemption. Under the amendment, a commercial insurer would be considered to have complied with any State law that requires or regulates the provision of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism if the insurer provides coverage in accordance with the definitions regarding acts of terrorism under the regulations issued by the Secretary. If any provision of any State law prevents an insurer from increasing its premium rates in an amount necessary to recover any assessments pursuant to the amendment, such provision is preempted only to the extent necessary to provide for such insurer to recover such losses.

Studies and Reports. Under the amendment, no later than 9 months after the date of enactment the Secretary would be required to submit a report to Congress that would consider the impact of the Program on: (1) the availability of insurance coverage for acts of terrorism; (2) the affordability of such coverage, including the effect of such coverage of premiums; and (3) the capacity of the insurance industry to absorb future losses resulting from acts of terrorism, taking into account the profitability of the insurance industry. The Secretary would also consider the probable impact on the United States economy if the Program terminates at midnight on December 31, 2002.

Within 9 months of enactment of the amendment, the Secretary would be required to conduct a study and report to the Congress on the potential effects of acts of terrorism on the life insurance industry in the United States and other lines of insurance coverage. The Secretary would be required to consult with the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC), representatives of the insurance industry, and other experts in the field.

Beginning 6 months after enactment of the amendment, and every 6 months thereafter, each participating insurance company would be required to submit a report to the NAIC that states the premium rates charged by that insurance company during the preceding 6-month period for insured losses covered by the Program, and includes an explanation of and justification for those rates. The NAIC would be required to forward copies of each report submitted, to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Comptroller General of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission would be required to submit a joint report to Congress and the Comptroller General of the United States summarizing and evaluating the reports forwarded by NAIC. No later than 90 days after receipt, the Comptroller General of the United States would be required to evaluate and submit a report to Congress an evaluating the reports.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

According to BRD (Lee), the amendment would affect direct spending and receipts; therefore, it is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. RMO staff advises that the bill could potentially have a PAYGO cost, but an OMB estimate has not been made. Cost estimates are problematic due to uncertainties involving future acts of terrorism. CBO scoring of the manager's amendment is not yet available.

After the holiday, I intend to nail down with Gary Walters, the military office (and the transportation folks operating there) who has been going to Camp David over the years in Government vehicles. My discussion on Friday with Leroy Borden who is the Transportation Director and has been working in the garage since the Johnson administration, reflected that over the years there has been widespread use of the cars to take friends and family of Presidents to Camp David. This practice may be justified on the basis of security precautions in connection with persons visiting the President, for the convenience of the President, and logistical convenience. It also makes security at Camp David easier.

With 'Hatch Express' Gone, Judiciary Crisis Hits Utah

BY DAWN HOUSE
THE SALT LAKE TRIBUNE

During the six years that Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch was chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Utah nominees for federal judgeships waited only a few months, and as few as 10 days, for Senate confirmations -- while judicial posts sat vacant so long elsewhere in the nation that 30 courts declared "judiciary emergencies."

The emergency has now hit Utah.

Hatch no longer is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Utahns nominated as federal judges must wait in line for confirmation hearings, just like everyone else.

In May, President Bush nominated University of Utah law professor Michael McConnell to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for one of two seats, which have been vacant so long that the court qualifies for a judicial emergency.

In all, the 12-member court has four vacancies -- and a caseload of 684. Federal guidelines say an "emergency" is a load of 500 to 700 cases per judicial panel where seats are vacant for more than 18 months.

"Since October 1999, when the first of the now four vacancies came about, the workload has increased dramatically," said Michael Murphy, a Utahn on the appeals court who waited less than three months for his confirmation in 1995 when Hatch was judiciary chairman.

Paul Cassell, a U. law professor and nominee to the U.S. District Court for Utah, now has the distinction of being the appointee to the Utah bench who has had to wait the longest for confirmation. The Utah federal court is not overburdened, however, in part because Hatch was instrumental in creating another judgeship in 1991, despite figures that suggested the post was not needed at the time.

Hatch criticized the committee's slow pace in confirming judges last week.

"We are about to adjourn with nearly 100 vacancies [on the federal bench], a rate of over 11 percent,'' Hatch said in a speech before the Senate. "This year will indeed go down in history as a black hole and a black mark for the failure to confirm judicial nominees."

In June, Utah's senior senator became just another member of the Republican minority when disgruntled Vermont Republican James Jeffords switched parties, which toppled Hatch from his Judiciary chairmanship.

But during his tenure as chairman, Hatch had been instrumental in streamlining the nominations of federal judges for Utah in what came to be known as the "Hatch Express."

The time between Ted Stewart's nomination and confirmation in 1999 was less than three months; Dale Kimball's was three weeks in 1997; and in 1995, Tena Campbell waited only 10 days.

In contrast, Cassell was nominated for the bench by Bush in June and is still awaiting a confirmation hearing. [Utah's second-longest confirmation wait goes back more than 50 years, when it took more than five months before a divided Senate finally confirmed the nomination of the controversial Willis Ritter.]

In the 1990s, during the same time that district and appeals courts in Hatch's back yard were fully staffed, more than 100 judgeships sat vacant nationwide, at one point comprising nearly 12 percent of the federal court system.

The backlog meant citizens had to wait for personal injury claims from car accidents or discrimination suits, creditors had to postpone trying to win back debts and business disputes languished for want of a court date. Democrats and the White House criticized Hatch for failing to move on replacements, while Hatch blamed Clinton for failing to nominate qualified candidates.

An independent report, however, found the Senate and White House were equally to blame for the logjam. The Washington, D.C.-based Citizens for Independent Courts reported that the average number of days it took a president to nominate a candidate increased from 240 for President Carter to 315 for Clinton. And the number of days it took the Senate to confirm a federal judge rose from 38 days in 1977-78 to 201 days two decades later.

Despite the bitter rhetoric between Clinton and Hatch, the White House deferred to Hatch's choices when nominating Utah judges, even though presidents usually look to their own parties in filling judgeships.

Hatch's power came from being able to stall nominations.

Clinton named Stewart to the Utah federal bench over objections from Utah Democrats and environmentalists, then, in a snub, waited weeks before issuing the final appointment.

Hatch's power was such that judgeships for Utah nominees went unfilled only when his choices were unacceptable to a wide range of opponents -- and that opposition surfaced before the candidates were officially nominated.

Although Murphy was appointed within months of his 1995 nomination to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, the seat stood vacant for nearly two years because of a tug-of-war between a core group of influential Democrats and Hatch.

Hatch had stubbornly held out for the appointment of respected Salt Lake City attorney Dan Berman.

But opponents, led by then-Attorney General Jan Graham, wealthy activist Annette Cumming and then-Congress- woman Karen Shepard, pushed for the appointment of Utah Supreme Court Justice Christine Durham.

The White House was barraged with letters from Utah Democrats claiming Berman was not a loyal Democrat and noting he had been a financial backer of Hatch's re-election bid in 1994. Hatch's efforts finally hit a roadblock when the American Bar Association declined to give Berman a glowing endorsement.

There had been so much behind-the-scenes bickering, however, that the Durham nomination was in a shambles as well.

Murphy, a respected state judge and a Democrat, was the compromise candidate -- selected by Hatch.

The current logjam is being blamed on Sen. Patrick Leahy, D- Vt., who took over as Judiciary chairman last past summer.
Currently, 94 judicial posts are vacant, which accounts for 11 percent of the district and appellate posts.
So far, half the candidates have no scheduled hearing before the Senate, according to the Department of Justice.
Judicial emergencies have been declared in six appellate courts and in California, Oregon, Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Alaska, Hawaii, Florida, Texas, North Carolina, Missouri, Ohio and Virginia.
Leahy maintains his committee has confirmed more judges than did past committees during the first years of the administration of the elder George Bush or the first year of the Clinton administration. For his part, Hatch said overall percentages of confirmations are a fairer comparison.
In a letter to rebut an editorial in The Wall Street Journal that criticized the judicial committee's slow progress, Leahy defended fellow Democrats.
"Our steady pace in acting on nominees predates the Sept. 11 attacks and continued during the extensive negotiations we oversaw in gaining passage of the anti-terrorism bill," Leahy wrote. "We convened unprecedented August recess hearings, holding one without a single Republican senator bothering to attend."
This month, Hatch pleaded with Democrats to "move the roadblocks they have erected in the confirmation process,'' particularly "those circuit court nominees who have been pending since May." Included on that list is McConnell, who is among the 36 nominees who are still awaiting a hearing date.

You need to fill out two forms. First is the Travel Authorization form, which you get from your office and must be signed by your supervisor. I have nothing to do with that part of the process, and you don't need to submit that to me.

Second, you need to fill out a Travel Expenses From Outside Sources (TEFOS) form, which you can get off the internal website or from Jason Torchinsky in our office. This must be filled out by you and signed by me prior to your trip (note -- prior approval is legally required in order to accept the payment, so make sure I see it and sign it before you leave).

Recently President Bush signed an executive order to further implement the 1978 Presidential Records Act, the law that establishes a process for reviewing and releasing documents of former presidents. This order ensures expeditious disclosure of documents to provide historians, scholars and the public valuable insights into the way our government works.

Freedom and openness are at the core of our government. The president's order was crafted to provide as much information as possible to the public while also respecting the constitutional rights of former presidents. For months skeptics have questioned President Bush's motives in establishing these sensible procedures. The order, they said, was an affront to open government and would put procedural roadblocks in the way of disclosure of important historical information. The critics were wrong.

Today, consistent with the president's order, the National Archives and Records Administration will inform the public that thousands of pages of records belonging to former president Reagan are available for release. These documents represent all that have been reviewed by the administration after receipt from the Reagan Library -- and this is only one of what will be many routine releases of records belonging to former presidents, including otherwise privileged records.

Today's action shows that President Bush's executive order can and will work as intended -- to facilitate appropriate and expeditious public release of presidential records consistent with the Constitution and the act.

At times, certain documents may still be so sensitive that they must remain confidential. In some cases, release of documents could jeopardize our national security, and while the pursuit of history is invaluable to our society, it should not endanger American lives. Nor should it deprive a president of candid advice while making crucial decisions.

Recognizing this, the Presidential Records Act expressly provides that former and current presidents retain the right to assert available privileges over presidential records after the act's 12-year period of presumed non-disclosure expires. While the executive order says nothing about whether and under what circumstances a privilege should be asserted, it does recognize a role for former presidents.

Some have been critical of the order's inclusion of former presidents in this process, but former presidents have the right to assert executive privilege based on both Supreme Court precedent and the Presidential Records Act itself. The act would be deemed unconstitutional if it did not allow them to assert available privileges.

Before the act became law, former chief executives enjoyed complete control over their presidential records. But even without a legal requirement, former presidents have chosen to provide their papers for historical study.

President Bush expects that this tradition will continue. The value of presidential records and the principles of openness and access that their release represents are respected by him and are no doubt just as important to the former presidents whose papers will be subject to the Presidential Records Act.

There is no fair or logical basis for presuming that former presidents subject to the act will exercise their constitutional and statutory authority to seek withholding of privileged records more aggressively than have earlier presidents. We are confident that, over time, the vast majority of presidential records -- including many otherwise privileged records -- will be made available to the public.

The executive order states that "absent compelling circumstances" the current president will defer to the decision of the former president to authorize release of records. This provision largely removes a sitting president as a potential impediment to release of a former president's records. Given that over time former presidents have authorized release of the vast majority of their records, it is clear President Bush intended the order to facilitate the expeditious release of such records.

If a former president should choose to assert privilege over a sensitive record, a requester may challenge the privilege claim in court. Such proceedings are routine when there is disagreement about the release of executive branch records under the Freedom of Information Act. Some have argued that the burden should lie with the former president in disputes over disclosure. But this would create the awkward situation of a former president's being forced to sue the current one -- a suggestion that is neither constitutionally proper nor sound policy.

The writer is counsel to the president.

Presidential Records Act Executive Order -- Talking Points (1/02/02)

- The order establishes procedures for former and current Presidents to review confidential and privileged records of former Presidents and to make appropriate determinations whether to withhold or release privileged documents. The proposed order makes clear that, absent extraordinary and compelling circumstances, a current President will not seek to withhold records that a former President otherwise has authorized for disclosure.

- The Supreme Court held (in 1977) that former Presidents retain the right to assert privileges over their records even after they have left office. This order simply establishes procedures for the former Presidents to protect and assert their rights if they so choose. It obviously would be inappropriate, if not contrary to law, for a current President to flout the Supreme Court by unilaterally overriding the constitutional rights of a former President.

- This order expressly states that it does not indicate whether and when a former President should assert privileges. This order is about procedure, not when -- if ever -- privilege should be asserted.

- The Act itself, as well as the legislative history, expressly recognizes that constitutional privileges remain available to a former and current President after expiration of the 12-year-period. (Congress has no authority, in any event, to limit the scope of the constitutional privileges available to a President or former President.)

- Before this Act took effect, former Presidents generally released the majority of their records over time even though they possessed plenary authority over their records. The Act and the executive order give former Presidents less power to withhold records than they possessed before enactment of the Presidential Records Act. There is no reason to think or predict, therefore, that former Presidents would seize upon their authority to withhold only privileged records more aggressively than previous former Presidents seized upon their authority to withhold all records.

    - The authorization for release of Reagan records that occurred on December 19 (and that are to be made available on January 3, 2002) is the first indication that this analysis is correct.

- In determining the legal requirements and assessing the policy issues, the Administration consulted extensively with the National Archives and Records Administration, the Department of Justice, and the former Presidents' representatives and has benefited from the consultation.

If it is not a fundraiser, not a state party event, and not an event for a specific candidate, it becomes a close call whether it in fact should be considered a "political event" for these calculation purposes. Do we know more about it? Then, I can double check with my people at Office of Special Counsel to make sure we classify it correctly. It could be an event in the gray area where we have some discretion as to how to classify.

"NAIC PRESIDENT EXPECTS MAJORITY OF STATES TO APPROVE TERRORISM EXCLUSION" (BestWire, 12/27/01)
DES MOINES, Iowa (BestWire) - Commissioners in 47 states approved a recommendation to allow exclusions for terrorism coverage, but whether that translates into those states actually allowing them is another matter, said the president of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners. During a Dec. 20 conference call, only California, New York and Connecticut voted against recommending approval for limited terrorism exclusions in the language of commercial property and commercial liability policies, said Terri Vaughan, Iowa insurance commissioner and NAIC president. Individual state laws will affect the insurance commissioners' ability to approve the exclusions, but the NAIC also recommended that any approval be withdrawn 15 days after the president signs a federal reinsurance program into law. "Our hope is Congress will come back in January and pass a law," Vaughan said. Massachusetts, Colorado, Idaho, South Dakota and Minnesota have said they will approve limited terrorism exclusions, and Vaughan said the " vast majority of states" will approve limited exclusions for terrorism. "The vote was overwhelming," she said. Commissioners had been receiving a number of exclusion filings for commercial lines, including a filing from the Insurance Services Office in early November, as the industry waited for Congress to pass a federal reinsurance backstop. The industry has been asking Congress for one since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 made reinsurance for terrorism all but disappear. The House passed a bill, but the Senate had not, when Congress adjourned Dec. 20. The commissioners held their conference call later that day. The Commissioners approved using ISO's exclusion language after working with ISO to narrow its scope, she said. The exclusion will be invoked if an act of terrorism results in losses of more than $25 million industrywide. "That pales in comparison to the magnitude of the World Trade Center losses, but it does provide limited coverage for small, isolated events," Vaughan said. ISO's original exclusion language was very broad and would have included limited events that had always intended to be covered, she said. For example, because the bombing of an abortion clinic was an exposure that was covered previously, commissioners wanted to find a way to continue it, she said. Along with narrowing the ISO exclusion language, the NAIC also changed its definition of terrorism to include terrorism caused by domestic sources, Vaughan said. When the definition was made public during the NAIC's Winter Meeting in Chicago, it only addressed international sources. An additional exclusion threshold applies to liability coverage only. When 50 or more people are killed or injured by an act of terrorism, the exclusion kicks in, and the policy would not provide coverage for any loss, she said. Terrorist acts involving the use of nuclear or biochemical materials would not be covered, either. On Dec. 21, the NAIC provided states an example of a bulletin that could be used to show they would allow the exclusions. Iowa's insurance department, for example, has posted the bulletin on its Web site indicating it would permit the exclusion, consistent with ISO language. Vaughan said she suspects other states will use the same expedited filing process Iowa is using so the insurance department can act quickly. A company can file a standard exclusion application indicating it's using the ISO endorsement and that it cannot get reinsurance coverage. Commissioners received very few filings for personal lines exclusions until a week ago, when ISO filed for them, Vaughan said. "We'll study that and make recommendations," she added. State insurance commissioners recognize the market issues that would be created if they did not make exclusions an option, Vaughan said. She declined to speculate on how big the potential disruption could be, but noted only renewal policies will need the exclusion, and not everyone is renewing on Jan. 1. They were also hearing that some commercial policies were moving into the surplus market and being written without terrorism coverage. The problem is the surplus or non-admitted market does not provide the policy purchaser with the same protection as the admitted market, which is backed up by a state guaranty fund, Vaughan said. Commissioners were concerned about consumers losing the guaranty fund protection, as well as losing other commercial coverages. "Anecdotal" stories about huge price increases in commercial rates, were being heard by the Commissioners, Vaughan said, and in response, the NAIC formed a task force at the Chicago meeting to gather data from states on rate trends. Commissioners will look at the data to identify any issues that need tackling. "We're in the process of designing what the data request will look like," Vaughan said. Aware of talk about the need for optional federal chartering, particularly since Sept. 11, Vaughan said that with all the discussion that has taken place in Congress since then "It's my sense there is a pretty high level of understanding on this issue of the inability of the industry to manage this potentially catastrophic exposure." The insurance industry's performance following Sept. 11 is a "remarkable" statement on the strength of state regulation. Vaughan said. State regulators have the industry in a position to withstand the significant losses of that day. "It's still standing and still offering coverage," she said. In the past, the federal government has created programs to address major problems, she said, citing the federal riot insurance program in the 1960s and the current federal flood insurance program, as examples. "In neither case was that seen as an argument favoring the need for federal regulation," Vaughan said. "I have a lot of difficulty figuring out how people tie the need for federal regulation with Sept. 11." (By Dennis Kelly, Washington bureau

PREVENTING CIVILIAN CASUALTIES

"There's never been a conflict where there have not been civilian deaths. If one were to take this activity in Afghanistan and rank it as to the number of civilian deaths, and the care and attentiveness that has gone in to try to have the right weapon and the most precise method of doing things, I can't imagine there's been a conflict in history where there has been less collateral damage--less unintended consequences."

-- Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, 1/3/02

☑ The terrorists declared war on civilians, killing more than 3,000 innocent people from more than 80 countries on September 11.

☑ The coalition has taken every step possible to protect civilians while the terrorists have targeted civilians by placing their military assets near mosques, hospitals and neighborhoods.

☑ The Afghan people themselves are noting the precision of the coalition military campaign.

IN THEIR OWN WORDS…

"Ali Ahmed, a 16-year-old thrill-seeker proficient in English, said that for kicks he would go to every bomb site in the city minutes after the blasts occurred. 'They rarely killed normal people,' Ali said. 'I went to many sites. I never saw a dead normal person.'" (The Washington Post, 12/12/01)

"I found to my surprise that rather than Kandahar being a city that was totally destroyed by bombing, it was a city certainly in disrepair, a poor city that was decaying, but not as a result of the bombing. In fact the bombing appeared to have been incredibly targeted. Just to give you one example, I went to this one street where there were two al-Qaida houses, and you saw a bombed-out house, basically nothing remaining, then a fully standing house that belonged to a family who lived there, and then another bombed-out house that had been an al-Qaida and Taliban safe house. So it was very interesting to see that some of the reports we had heard about the Pentagon doing precision bombing, in fact, had been correct, that to a large extent they had really pinpoint bombed al-Qaida headquarters or al-Qaida offices," said Indira Lakshmanan, Asia correspondent for the Boston Globe. (The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer, 12/26/01)

"Now, with journalists and humanitarian workers gaining access to bombed areas for the first time, a picture is emerging of an aerial campaign remarkable for its pinpoint accuracy." (Source: Chicago Tribune, 11/21/01)

"The capture of Kandahar, perhaps more than any other city in Afghanistan, stands as an example of the new American high-tech war. A visit to about 20 bombing targets in the city showed that relatively few innocent bystanders had been killed, largely because the bombs were accurate." (Source: The New York Times, 12/26/01)

"We were amazed at the accuracy," said Mohammed Alem, a carpenter from the Qasabale-Kargere housing complex near the airport, where the tarmac and surrounding grounds are littered with aircraft fuselages scattered like broken pencils. (Source: The Philadelphia Inquirer, 11/21/01)

"A drive around [Kandahar] seemed to contradict Taliban assertions of wholesale damage and massive civilian casualties; on the contrary, US airstrikes appear to have hit Taliban and Qaeda facilities, not civilian targets. There are few war injuries in Kandahar hospitals, and no evidence of a large civilian death toll." (The Boston Globe, 12/15/01)

“The targeting was exact," said Qiamuddin, 50, a former Afghan army officer and a village elder. (Source: The Guardian [U.K.], 12/01/01)

SIGNIFICANT AGENCY FOIA REQUESTS

DOE

- David McIntosh of Natural Resources Defense Council requested information related to the new source review program and regulations regarding the Clean Air Act.
- Ginger Allen of CBS News requested copy of the DOE Fiscal Year 2000 financial statements.
- Benjamin Jones of Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee requested correspondence between DOE and Cong. Lindsey Graham.
- Michael Doyle of McClatchy Newspapers requested copy of the FOIA request log for January 2001 through June 2001.
- Reece Rushing of OMB Watch requested records pertaining to the removal of information from DOE websites, reading rooms, depository libraries or any other venue from which the public can retrieve government information after the September 11.

DOI

- Bald Eagles and Off-Road Vehicles. The Center for Biological Diversity has submitted a request for materials under the Freedom of Information Act to BLM. As a result, the USGS Forest and Rangeland Ecosystem Science Center, was contacted by the BLM to determine the availability of a 1979 biological opinion related to bald eagles and a proposed off-road-vehicle designation in Tuolumne County, California.

DOJ

- Christopher Farrell, of Judicial Watch, Inc., has requested all records pertaining to George Salem. This is to include any records of meetings he has had with the Department, any records pertaining to political contributions he has made to the Administration, and any records involving litigation with the Holy Land Foundation and the Quranic Literacy Institute.

- Eliot Kleinberg, of the Palm Beach Post, has requested all records pertaining to "any Florida aspects of [the Department's] investigation into the terrorist attacks of Sept.11 as well as the anthrax investigation in South Florida."

Thousands Of Reagan Presidential Papers Released (USA/AP)
The Reagan papers
USA Today/AP, January 04, 2002
WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan's image as a "man's man" was hurting him with women voters, adviser Elizabeth Dole says in a memo released Thursday in a batch of Reagan records.
"While this characterization has been helpful with men, it may have worked to his detriment with regard to women," Dole, then special assistant to the president for public liaison, wrote in the handwritten draft of a 1982 memo to three Reagan advisers.
"An often-heard question is whether the president takes women seriously." Dole went on to become Reagan's transportation secretary. She now is running for a Senate seat in North Carolina.
The memo was among 8,000 Reagan presidential papers kept under wraps since January 2001 while the Bush administration developed an executive order to govern release of presidential records from Reagan on.
Still sealed are an additional 60,000 pages of Reagan records and tens of thousands of pages left behind by Reagan's vice president, George Bush.
The boxes opened Thursday at the Reagan presidential library in Simi Valley, Calif., included the office files of some of his lieutenants, including former chief of staff James Baker and Baker's aides Richard Darman and James Cicconi.
In one memo, adviser Lyn Nofziger complains the Reagan White House was too supportive of liberal AFL-CIO president Lane Kirkland. "When are we going to quit trying to be nice to Lane Kirkland?" Nofziger asks in his July 1, 1981, memo to Baker.
The Presidential Records Act allowed the 68,000 pages of records to remain closed for 12 years because they contained confidential internal advice and deliberations among government officials.
That wait ended in January 2001. Because there is no provision under the Freedom of Information Act to keep the records secret any longer, they were scheduled for release.
The Bush White House, however, delayed opening the files for a year so it could review them and work on an executive order Bush issued Nov. 1 that gives former presidents more authority to withhold certain papers.
The White House said Thursday it expects to finish reviewing all 68,000 records by the end of the month. Duke Blackwood, director of the Reagan library, said the rest of the records should be available to the public by spring.
"Assuming Bush administration officials have opted not to be overly restrictive in their decisions of what to release in these pages, there is a fascinating story about how President Reagan chose to use or ignore the confidential advice of his key lieutenants," says Bruce Craig, director of the National Coordinating Committee for the Promotion of History.

Even if all the records are released in coming weeks, Public Citizen, a consumer advocacy group based in Washington, plans to continue its legal challenge of the executive order.

"This executive order is unlawful," said Public Citizen attorney Scott Nelson. "We shouldn't have to have this order governing the release of Reagan documents and Bush documents and other president's documents from here to eternity."

White House officials say Bush's action establishes an orderly process for implementing the Presidential Records Act. Bush's order gives former presidents more authority to claim executive privilege to withhold certain papers because they contain military, diplomatic or national security secrets, communications among the president and his advisers or legal advice.

Although White House counsel Alberto Gonzales denies it, some historians have suggested the Bush White House is worried about what the Reagan papers might reveal about former Reagan officials who now work for Bush. Among former Reagan aides are Secretary of State Colin Powell, Budget Director Mitch Daniels, Jr. and White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card.

Ari may attend these events and have the RJC pay for them, as long as the events pertain to his official responsibilities (sounds like they do). He may attend and speak at fundraisers, but he may not raise or ask for money. I'm happy to help draw that distinction if you'd like. Moose Cobb and Brett Kavanagh also know something about it.

Ari has been invited by the Republican Jewish Coalition to participate in a series of events in Palm Beach, Florida. He would arrive on a Saturday afternoon with a major event to be held that evening. The next morning, they would hold a breakfast and lunch in either Broward or Miami-Dade County. Ari would be back in DC on Sunday afternoon. They would provide roundtrip transportation. Before I pursue this any further, is this something Ari would be permitted to do? (They only mention a series of events generally, no mention of a fundraiser.) Can he do fundraisers? I need to clarify with the RJC.

I concur, but I note that if the event is a political event, than Ari's participation would be better viewed as "unofficial" and if it is not a political event, it would be easier to do if his participation were "official." Brett handles all political event questions, which touch upon use of title rules and et cetera.

Bush Administration Under Fire For Claiming Privilege In FBI Informant Case. ABC News (1/6, story 9, Simpson) reported last night, &There's another controversy involving the White House tonight. At issue is the President's decision to block a congressional inquiry into the FBI's use of informants.8 ABC (Gerstein) added, &Joseph Salvati spent decades in prison for murder, even though the FBI knew he was innocent.8 Salvati was shown saying, &The FBI took away 30 years of my life, my family, my wife and my four children. That should never have to happen again.8 ABC added, &The FBI's Boston office kept quiet about Salvati to protect two informants, reputed mobsters Whitey Bulger and Steven Flemmi. While working for the FBI, they allegedly carried out at least 19 murders. Their FBI handler says his actions were authorized by top Justice Department officials.8 Former FBI agent Joseph Connolly was shown saying, &The strike force directed the FBI, my superiors, to confer a special status on Mr. Bulger and Mr. Flemmi. We were told they were to be left alone to continue to do what they were doing.8 ABC added, &Congress opened an investigation into the FBI's handling of top informants, but last month, President Bush invoked executive privilege, ordering the Justice Department not to turn over documents detailing prosecutors' internal discussions about the informants. The move puts Mr. Bush at odds with members of his own party.8 Rep. Dan Burton (R-IN) was shown saying, & If Congress cannot exercise its oversight responsibilities, then you end up with one branch of government, the executive branch, running everything, and they'll be able to control and cover up anything they want to.8 ABC added, &Traditionally, executive privilege has protected a president's right to confidential advice, but one law professor says Mr. Bush is trying to extend the privilege to decisions at all Federal agencies.8 Legal analyst Mark Rozell was shown saying, &I think the Bush team is trying to rewrite the rules on executive privilege. They are trying to expand the scope of executive privilege, I think, in almost breathtaking fashion.8 ABC added, &Bush Administration officials declined to be interviewed, but one former White House counsel says the President is right to resist.8 C. Boyden Gray was shown saying, &The enforcement of the criminal laws is a very unique area. It's one of a few areas that's committed exclusively to the President, who is charged by the Constitution with seeing that the laws are faithfully executed.8 ABC added, & Congressman Burton says he will not seek a court fight with the President, but he will hold hearings to expose the FBI's misconduct and to press Mr. Bush to cooperate with Congress.8

There are four of us currently reviewing the documents. Each of us is working out of a separate box, and each box is being tagged so as to not be initially reviewed twice. Those boxes will be separated from the others to further avoid duplicative efforts.

I am available at anytime Thursday morning.

Chad--

Terrific. Thanks for your help in getting them over here so soon.

All--

Ed made a great suggestion last week that's worth reiterating: Please leave a written record in the room of which boxes you've taken a look at; this will ensure that at least one person takes a preliminary look at each of the boxes.

Let's plan to meet either on Thursday morning to assess where we are at that point preliminarily in terms of being able to craft a workable review protocol. What times work best for everyone? My schedule is relatively flexible that morning.

Thanks,

--Dan

There's a cafeteria, such as it is, here in the OEOB. Or we could walk directly across the street to Cosi.
Sounds like Brett is in too.
Why don't you come to my office (149) when your meeting is out.

I've got two meetings at OEOB tomorrow (Tuesday) with a brief break from 12 to 12:45. Would any of you be free to grab a very quick bite to eat at or near your shop?

Noel's right.
I suggest adding a sentence at the end of the 3rd paragraph of the draft response that says something like:
"Further, we assume that by asserting your independence from "the views of any administration or branch of government" on questions of statutory interpretation, you do not mean to imply that you would not abide by a judicial decision in the pending suit.

Mary Berry's letter states that "[i]t is essential that the Commission . . . no be compelled to abide by the views of any administration or branch of government on matters such as internal agency statutory interpretation." Is she saying that she would not follow the Judicial Branch's construction of the law?

- "Pakistan rejects terrorism in all its forms and manifestations and has fully cooperated with the international coalition against terrorism in that spirit." (Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf, at a press conference with UK Prime Minister Tony Blair, 1/7/02)

- "It is important that we do everything that we can now that the military action has been successful, although we still have objectives to be secured, that we make sure that the international community is there with the commitment for reconstruction in Afghanistan in the medium and long term..." (UK Prime Minister Tony Blair, at a press conference with Pakistan President Pervez Musharraf, 1/7/02)

Message

Osama bin Laden is a coward who murders innocents, including women, children and Muslims.

We are a long way from finished in Afghanistan. Much difficult and dangerous work is yet to come. Many terrorists are still hiding in heavily fortified bunkers in rugged territory. One by one, we are going to find them. Piece by piece, we will destroy their network of terror.

The U.S. is leading a global coalition that has made great progress in the war on terrorism:

- Began to destroy al-Qaeda's grip on Afghanistan by driving the Taliban from power.
- Disrupted al-Qaeda's global operations and terrorist financing networks.
- Helped the innocent people of Afghanistan recover from the Taliban's reign of terror.
- Helped Afghans put aside long-standing differences to form a new interim government that represents all Afghans – including women.

Facts of the Day

- The U.S. government is keeping at least 16,000 Afghan families warm through the harsh winter months. USAID has contributed more than $1 million to provide 2,756 tons of cooking and heating charcoal to approximately 96,000 of Afghanistan's most vulnerable people for the next three months.
- USAID has contributed more than $7 million to address the water and sanitation needs to the Afghani people. This includes funding the drilling and rehabilitation of water sources, the construction of latrines, and education on hygiene and waste disposal.

I spoke to the President's diarist - she told me that Oval Office photo ops w/ candidates have precedent (they were done during the last three administrations). However, she could not provide me with details b/c the search is too vague.

How do you want to proceed?

I should have been more clear....we discussed "photos taking place in the WH." I mentioned the Oval - but, she said it occured everywhere, depending on the particular president's schedule.

She said that this included both incumbants and candidates - we did a variation of this twice this year (Schundler & Early). Though this also included time with the press which would be unnecc. if we were just doing photos.

Judge and Tim: Carl Cannon (president of writers association) was in my meeting with historians. He is writing story for National Journal. He wants to describe the meeting and use the quote below from me from the meeting. Anne was ok with it. I am unsure whether it is good that I be identified publicly, although the horse is unfortunately well out of the barn on that. The quote itself is good, I guess. We could try to have me identified as a "White House lawyer." Let me know.

I am heading upstairs in ten minutes to open Rooms 7521/7523, where they will remain open all day. The only exception may be lunch, depending on who is there from noon-1:00pm. If you arrive at the rooms between noon and 1:00pm to find the doors locked, they will be reopened at 1:00pm.

Further, in light of Dan's email yesterday regarding our meeting to discuss protocol, I have blocked off Conference Room 3143 (where we met last time) for Thursday morning between 8:00am and noon.

Chad--

Terrific. Thanks for your help in getting them over here so soon.

All--

Ed made a great suggestion last week that's worth reiterating: Please leave a written record in the room of which boxes you've taken a look at; this will ensure that at least one person takes a preliminary look at each of the boxes.

Let's plan to meet either on Thursday morning to assess where we are at that point preliminarily in terms of being able to craft a workable review protocol. What times work best for everyone? My schedule is relatively flexible that morning.

Thanks,

--Dan

Brett,

David has just sent to me a copy of a letter dated December 27 from Walker to Rumsfeld enclosing draft agency protocols which are intended to govern the GAO's work with the agencies. I agree with David's initial impression that this cries out ofr a coordinated response. Please discuss this with Judge Gonzales with a view towards (1) contacting the general counsels to see whether they have received copies of the GAO draft and (2) coordinating a response. We should also get a copy to OLC and get their views ASAP.

Attorney seeking judgeship
BY JAY WEAVER
Miami Herald

Interim U.S. Attorney Guy Lewis, passed over by President Bush for the permanent job as South Florida's top prosecutor, reset his sights Tuesday on a federal judgeship in Miami.

Lewis submitted his application for a seat to be vacated by U.S. District Judge Shelby Highsmith on March 15.

Lewis, 40, who lost out to Miami lawyer Marcos Jim?nez for the U.S. attorney nomination in November, declined to comment about his quest for the federal bench.

Roberto Martinez, who chairs the Federal Judicial Nominating Commission, noted Lewis' judicial application is virtually the same as his previous one for U.S. attorney.

SEEMS FAMILIAR

``It looks like one I've seen before,'' said Martinez, a former Miami U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Florida.

Martinez said Lewis attached a cover letter to his judicial application, expressing a strong interest in continuing his public service. The Tennessee native began his legal career in 1986 as a law clerk for a Miami federal judge before becoming an assistant U.S. attorney.

``It's a wonderful opportunity to continue to serve the South Florida community, and I appreciate very much your kind consideration,'' wrote Lewis, who is not affiliated with any political party.

Lewis' application may carry great weight with the 22-member Southern District Judicial Nominating Commission, which includes his mentor, Thomas Scott. Lewis first clerked for Scott when he was a federal judge and later served as the No. 2 prosecutor when Scott was U.S. attorney. Lewis replaced Scott in June 2000.

Lewis, a popular and well respected career prosecutor who won convictions against Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega and a Cuba spy ring, apparently lacked the political juice to keep the job permanently.

REPRESENTED BUSH

Jim?nez, 42, a partner in the law firm of White & Case and a federal prosecutor in Miami for four years, was on the GOP legal team that represented George W. Bush in the 2000 presidential election recount fight.

Lewis' pursuit of the federal judicial post also could have a chilling effect on others who asked for applications but have not submitted them.

During the past month, Martinez said more than 30 lawyers, prosecutors and judges have requested applications for the vacancy created by Highsmith's decision to become a senior federal judge. Highsmith, 72, appointed by President George Bush in 1991, will have a lighter caseload as a senior judge.

The mailing deadline for applications is next Tuesday.

``There has been a lot of interest in this vacancy,'' Martinez said.

OTHER APPLICANT

He stressed he could not identify those who requested applications but could disclose those who already submitted them.

He said the only other applicant so far is Barry Seltzer, a Fort Lauderdale federal magistrate. He was among the three finalists last fall for a vacant U.S. district judgeship in Fort Lauderdale but lost the presidential nomination to Palm Beach Circuit Judge Kenneth Marra.

Last fall's other federal bench vacancy in Miami went to Republican Miami attorney Jose Martinez.

Federal judicial candidates must fill out 34 sections, with pointed questions about their legal education, experience, cases, public service, finances and other factors.

Paul:
Attached is a draft of a request to NARA for the Clinton presidential records we discussed this morning.
The last paragraph is meant to track the requirements of 44 USC 2205(2)(B).

Brad -- Paul thought you had done one of these in conjunction with the tobacco litigation. Any suggestions?

Dear Mr. Stern:

Pursuant to 44 U.S.C. § 2205(2)(B), I am writing to request access to the presidential records described below.

It is my understanding that the International Trade Commission, in conjunction with litigation in Nippon Steel v. United States (CIT No. 01-00103), requested that National Archives and Records Administration staff conduct a search of President Clinton's presidential records to locate documents responsive to plaintiffs' discovery requests in that case. I also understand that your staff identified 21 pages of potentially responsive material and provided three of those pages to the ITC.

I request that the National Archives and Records Administration provide the White House with access to the 18 pages identified by your staff but not provided to the ITC. Upon receipt of those documents, we would review them for privilege and would provide non-privileged documents to the ITC for potential use in the litigation.

Although we do not know the nature or contents of the requested documents, we believe that they are not otherwise available to the Administration. Moreover, they are needed for the conduct of current business of the executive branch.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

The level of detail is fine with me. But I suggest making the format consistent. I see three types of inconsistency among the entries: (1) "Memo re: Possible Prosecution" (##1,3,6) vs. "Prosecutive Memo" (rest); "Patriarca, et al." (#3) vs. listing individuals (#2,5,9,10); and identifying alleged violations (#4) vs. not listing them (rest).

- What we look for:
    - Judicial Restraint/Respect for Precedent
    - No litmus test
    - Imperfect Process
- Scorecard
    - Nominations
    - Confirmations

Let me give you some comparisons to where we are on judicial nominations.

Timing and Number of Judicial Nominations

(January 3, 2002)

First, Timing

- The President made his initial 11 circuit court nominations on May 9, 2001
  - President Reagan's initial nominations did not occur until July 9, 1981.
  - President George H.W. Bush's initial nominations did not occur until August 4, 1989.
  - President Clinton's initial nominations did not occur until August 6, 1993.

REV_00138860

Second, Number of Nominations Before August Recess

- The President made 44 circuit and district court nominations by the August recess.
  - President Reagan made 13 circuit and district nominations before the recess.
  - President George H.W. Bush's made 8 circuit and district nominations before the recess.
  - President Clinton made 13 circuit and district nominations before the recess.

Third, Number of Nominations During First Year

- The Administration anticipates that the President will make over 100 circuit and district court nominations during his first year in office.
- The Administration has nominated 66 judges…29 circuit court judges and 36 district court judges and one to the Court of International Trade.
  - President Reagan made a total of 44 circuit and district court nominations during his first year in office.

REV_00138862

- President George H.W. Bush's made a total of 23 circuit and district court nominations during his first year in office.
- President Clinton made a total of 47 circuit and district court nominations during his first year in office.

As for the number of our 66 nominees that have been confirmed:

- There have been 28 of our nominees confirmed…6 circuit and 22 district court judges.

REV_00138863

- 42% of total nominees confirmed.

- So 21% of our circuit court nominees and 59% of our district court nominees have been confirmed.

When President Bush took office there were 82 vacancies. Right now there are 94 vacancies meaning that despite record number of nominations, the federal judiciary is actually shrinking.

REV_00138864

Compare those ratios with the confirmation percentages of the past three presidents during their first year in office.

- Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton nominated 44 judges prior to the August recess in the first year of their respective Administrations.
- Of those 44, 43 were confirmed by the end of the President's first year in office.
- This President made 44 circuit and district court nominations - yet only 24 have been confirmed.

94 US Attorneys 94 US Marshals

REV_00138865

Closing

- Rewarding/Challenging/Much rides on the advice…

- It is a job of relentless pressure/reflected in average tenure - 18 months/Clinton had seven Counsels.

- But there are fun moments
    - Horseshoes
    - Golf
- Yes - the hours are long, pay not so great

3 Judges, 2 Lawyers Remain on List to Replace Federal Judge

By Robert Ruth
The Columbus Dispatch
Thursday, January 10, 2002

A long list of candidates to replace U.S. District Judge George C. Smith reportedly has been whittled to three common-pleas judges, a top aide to Gov. Bob Taft and the wife of former Columbus Mayor Greg Lashutka.

REV_00138905

Sources said the five remaining candidates for the lifetime appointment are William A. Klatt, Taft's chief counsel; Judge Gregory L. Frost of the Licking County Common Pleas Court; Judges Patrick M. McGrath and Michael H. Watson of the Franklin County Common Pleas Court; and Catherine Adams, Lashutka's wife and a partner with the Columbus branch of the law firm Squire, Saunders & Dempsey. U.S. Sens. Mike DeWine and George V. Voinovich, both Ohio Republicans, are expected to recommend a candidate to the White House within weeks. President Bush then would formally nominate the person, who would be subject to Senate confirmation.

Smith, 66, became a semi-retired senior judge on Jan. 1. Senior judges handle criminal and civil cases on a reduced basis. Smith had been a full-time federal judge for 14 years.

Last summer, a dozen potential nominees, including Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien, were under consideration. The candidates were interviewed by a committee established by DeWine and Voinovich, sources said.

The nomination and confirmation process is expected to take months, even after DeWine and Voinovich make their recommendation. The candidate's background must be checked by the FBI before Bush sends a name to the Senate.

The Democratic-controlled Senate has moved slowly this year in confirming the Republican president's judicial nominees.

Smith's replacement will be paid $145,100 a year to handle federal criminal and civil cases from a 30- county area in central and southeastern Ohio.

UNC School Of Law professor Gene Nichol, writing in the Raleigh News & Observer, notes that during Pres. Clinton's WH yrs, Sen. Helms later reversed his position when Pres. Bush nominated Judge Terrence Boyle, an ex-Helms staffer. "But, this time, Edwards was the holdup. He refused to let Boyle pass unless accompanied by a more moderate" NC addition, and NC, as a result, is still "unrepresented." So "now Edwards is under fire." The 4th Circuit, "dominated by Reagan and Bush appointees," has "repeatedly handed down rulings rejected by all other circuits, only to be reversed by the solidly conservative" SCOTUS "for going too far." Judge Garcia to "Slow Down"; Move Creates Opening in Western District

By Gary Martin
The San Antonio Express-News
Tuesday, January 8, 2002

U.S. District Judge Hipolito F. "Hippo" Garcia of San Antonio has asked to take senior status, creating an opening to be filled by President Bush in the Western Judicial District of Texas.

Garcia, 76, was appointed to the federal bench in 1981 by President Carter.

He is the first Mexican American to serve as a judge in the Western Judicial District, which sweeps from Austin to El Paso and includes San Antonio, Del Rio and Midland. Chief Judge Royal Ferguson has indicated he will move to San Antonio to fill the vacancy created by Garcia, leaving a judicial vacancy in Midland to be filled by the president.

Garcia, who has been ill, announced in a letter to Bush and other federal judges that he would take senior status Jan. 15. The change in status will allow Garcia to retain some judicial duties.

"He wants to remain in service," said Marilyn Primomo, a briefing attorney for Garcia in San Antonio, adding that the change of status "allows him to slow down a little."

U.S. Sens. Phil Gramm and Kay Bailey Hutchison, both Texas Republicans, have indicated they will begin a search for a candidate to fill the Western Judicial District vacancy.

The senators have recommended to Bush two candidates for previous openings in the Western Judicial District: Philip Martinez in El Paso and Alia Moses Ludlum of Del Rio.

Martinez, a former state judge in El Paso, has been nominated by Bush and is awaiting Senate confirmation.

The recommendation of Ludlum, a U.S. magistrate in Del Rio, is being reviewed at the White House.

Gramm and Hutchison are likely to select the candidate for the vacancy from a pool of applicants screened for the earlier posts.

Garcia was born in San Antonio, just blocks from the U.S. Courthouse, and began his legal career as an assistant criminal district attorney. He was elected and served as judge for Bexar County Court-at-Law No. 2 for 10 years.

He was appointed judge to the state's 144th District Court in 1975, and he served in that capacity until Carter selected him for the federal bench six years later.

REV_00138907

In 1998, Garcia attended a ceremony at the Bexar County Criminal Justice Center where his portrait was unveiled for years of service.

"Things don't just happen by themselves," Garcia said at the event. "Everyone has to have help and advice and support from his friends."

Statistical Games Lock Up Judicial Confirmations

By Lee Davidson
The Deseret News
Wednesday, January 9, 2002

Mark Twain once said there are lies, damned lies -- and statistics.

Senators are throwing around such statistics to seek political points about judicial confirmations. And a couple of Utah nominees are pinned in the crossfire.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, ranking Republican on the Senate Judicial Committee, calls it "statistics judo." The most recent round came as Judiciary Committee Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said (without blushing or having his nose grow) that it was generous of the Democratic-controlled Senate to confirm 28 of President Bush's judicial nominees in 2001.

Leahy said that is one more than the 27 confirmed by a Democratic-controlled Senate in Democrat Bill Clinton's first year in office.

Sounds big-hearted, right? Democrats gave Bush one more judge than they gave their own Clinton -- even though they think Republicans on the Supreme Court improperly gave Bush the presidency through rulings that stopped the Florida vote recount.

Immediately jumping in, wearing his statistics judo black belt, was Hatch.

He countered Leahy by pointing out that Clinton made just 32 judicial nominations during his first year in office. The Senate confirmed 27, for a confirmation rate of 84 percent.

But Bush nominated 66 people as judges in 2001. Only 28 were confirmed, for a low confirmation rate of 42 percent. That's exactly half the rate the Senate gave to Clinton.

Besides merely blocking Leahy, Hatch tried attacking with some statistics of his own.

For example, Hatch said since Democrats are proud they gave Bush as many judges as Clinton received in his first year -- they should continue by also giving Bush as many judges next year as they gave Clinton in his second year: a whopping 100.

REV_00138908

Fat chance. Bush's nominees are bogged down for many reasons -- leading to the statistics judo. Among casualties are two University of Utah law professors. Paul Cassell is nominated to Federal District Court in Utah. And Michael McConnell is nominated to the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Both are conservatives. Democrats are not anxious to put more true-blue conservatives on the bench.

Also, Democrats -- without saying it out loud -- appear to be giving Republicans some payback.

They contend that Republicans confirmed too few of Clinton's nominees during his last year in office. They were furious at Republicans for taking the liberal-leaning American Bar Association out of the confirmation process. When Democrats seized back Senate control earlier this year, they restored that power to the ABA. The ABA then soon gave mixed ratings to Cassell.

Democrats also claimed Bush had not consulted closely enough with them about home-state nominees and that Hatch as chairman also gave home-state Democrats too little say. Hence, confirmations proceed at snail's pace -- maybe a glacier's pace.

Further complicating chances of McConnell and Cassell -- but also maybe giving them hope -- is that Democrats may use them as bargaining chips with home-state-sponsor Hatch.

They did that in 2000 when they long delayed the nomination of Ted Stewart to the Utah federal bench. It ended when then-chairman Hatch in exchange allowed votes on some controversial nominees made by Clinton.

The games being playing have left one of every nine seats vacant on the federal bench. It also caused White House spokesman Ari Fleischer to complain, "The president deserves to have his team in place, particularly during a time of war."

Senate Democratic Leader Tom Daschle responded that such comments are "part of an increasingly fierce and highly coordinated campaign by Republicans in Washington to attack Senate Democrats."

Hatch had some good advice for the Senate in a speech, which everyone already knows but ignores.

He said, "The process of advice and consent on the president's judicial nominations is not a game. This is not football or baseball, and the goal here is not a particular set of numbers. These are nominations for very important positions . . . and it is the Senate's constitutional obligation to review them."

But 2002 is an election year. With politicians seeking any advantage for their parties, the games -- and use of statistics and other darned lies -- will likely continue.

Depleted Bench; The Chief Justice Decries the Lack of Federal Judges

Akron Beacon Journal
Tuesday, January 8, 2001

Even the daily operations of the U.S. Supreme Court have been affected by the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 and the subsequent anthrax threat. Chief Justice William Rehnquist noted last week in his annual report on the federal courts that the justices may not hear as many cases as usual this year. Mail deliveries have been delayed. As a result, the flow of legal documents has been interrupted.

The chief justice stretched his point to suggest that the failure of the Senate to confirm nominees to the federal bench jeopardizes (however slightly) the war on terror. Hard to imagine a federal court failing to act on a key wiretap or other concern because its staffing levels have fallen.

Rehnquist could easily have stuck with the view he articulated when Republicans held the Senate. Senators abuse the principle of advise and consent when they turn nominations into little more than political combat. Republicans blocked Clinton nominees, and now Democrats have thrown obstacles in the way of Bush selections.

You need only count the vacancies on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit in Cincinnati. The court should have 16 judges. It currently operates at half-strength. The war on terror may not be compromised, but the interests of people with business before the court have been ill-served.

President Bush has put forward six nominations for the 6th circuit. A Jeffrey Sutton, a former Ohio solicitor, may deserve most careful assessment. A Justice Deborah Cook of the Ohio Supreme Court deserves better than to have her nomination held hostage to Michigan senators upset with the selections from their state.

The Senate has an important role. It should fulfill its duty by moving ahead on judicial nominations.

DRAFT: January 10, 2002 [7:07 p.m.]

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL WHITE HOUSE STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: GUIDELINES FOR COMMUNICATIONS RELATING TO MATTERS SUBJECT TO INVESTIGATION

From the first days of the Administration, President Bush and Secretary Card have emphasized the importance of conducting ourselves with honor and integrity and maintaining the highest ethical standards. After President Bush's first year in office, we can all be proud of the Administration's record in this regard. As we head into our second year, the announcement of a variety of investigations into the causes and consequences of the Enron corporation bankruptcy provides an excellent opportunity for us all to review some basic but important guidelines that will help to ensure our continued success.

The President has made clear that he is committed to seeing that the appropriate agencies of the federal government conduct full and fair investigations into Enron's collapse and examine changes in law, regulation, and policy that might help to correct whatever problems may have contributed to it. In complex situations of this kind, however, even entirely innocent actions or statements by members of the White House staff can unfortunately be misconstrued or distorted and give rise to damaging suspicions or accusations. To help reduce the risk of such misunderstandings, we ask that you observe the following guidelines:

1. Refrain from taking any action or making any communication that might influence – or be perceived as influencing or attempting to influence – the course of an official investigation. Professional investigators and law enforcement personnel must be permitted to do their jobs and find and evaluate the facts unaffected by any considerations apart from a full and vigorous pursuit of the truth. If you need to communicate with people outside the White House, whether within the government or in the private sector, in relation to a matter that may be under investigation, please check with my office first.

2. If you are contacted by any person conducting an investigation who is requesting documents or other information from you, please contact my office so that we may assist you in ensuring that a timely and appropriate response is made.

3. Consistent with our previous guidance concerning the requirements of the Presidential Records Act, do not destroy or discard any presidential records. In addition, even your personal notes or other documents that might not constitute presidential records should be preserved if they pertain, even indirectly, to a matter that is under investigation.

4. If you are in doubt about the propriety of anything you are planning or being requested to do or say, please do not hesitate to contact my office for additional guidance.

AGENCY FOIA REQUESTS

HHS

- The Physicians Committee for Responsible Medicine (PCRM) has filed a lawsuit for information about an experiment involving cats at Ohio State University (OSU) in Columbus. The research is funded by the NIH National Institute on Drug Abuse. PCRM's suit alleges NIH improperly withheld details of OSU veterinarian Michael Podell's work, aimed at developing an animal model for brain damage known to occur in humans who are both drug abusers and infected with the AIDS virus. The suit is being brought in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia

- ACF received the following requests:
  Timothy J. Casey, of the NOW Legal Defense Fund, requested copies of documents in reference to comments received regarding the listening sessions on TANF reauthorization.

  Gordy Holt, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, requested copies of documents pertaining to all financial audit-reports involving Seattle's 1996 JOLI grant recipient, Black Dollar Days Task Force.

- HRSA received the following requests:

  Twelve requests for samples of funded Community-Based Abstinence Education Planning or Implementation grant applications.

  Riverfront Times, St. Louis, MO, requested the 1998,1999, and 2000 audit reports for Grace Hill Neighborhood Health Centers, also located in St. Louis.

DOI

- Landmark Legal Foundation v. Department of the Interior. Landmark Legal Foundation mailed a FOIA request to the BLM on October 24, 2001. The BLM evidently never received the request due to the non-delivery of mail from the Brentwood Post Office after the anthrax incident. Landmark Legal Foundation served this suit on the Department on December 26, 2001, which is the first anyone at the Department or BLM had heard of the request. The BLM is beginning to process the request, which is for numerous documents pertaining to issuance or award of grants or contracts to non-profit organizations, from 1993 to the present. DOI is contacting the U.S. Attorney's Office to determine how to handle the case.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

Draft January 11, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to follow up on the letter from the Honorable Alberto Gonzalez, Counsel to the President, dated January 10, 2002, regarding the Committee's subpoena for sensitive deliberative prosecutorial memoranda.

In accordance with Judge Gonzalez's letter, we scheduled a meeting with Committee staff for yesterday afternoon to confer about the documents subject to the President's assertion of executive privilege and explore possibilities for accommodating the Committee's oversight needs, consistent with Executive Branch interests. We were disappointed that Committee staff canceled the meeting moments before it was scheduled to begin. It is not clear to us how the issues relating to these documents can be resolved if the Committee is unwilling to engage in the accommodation process by meeting with us.

We are advised that you intend to hold a hearing on January 23, 2002 about executive privilege precedents and while we will be prepared to provide testimony on that subject, we were under the impression that you were primarily interested in these documents in connection with your oversight regarding the FBI's handling of informants in Boston. If that is, in fact, the Committee's interest, then I hope that you will agree to meet with Department representatives in the near future to discuss the outstanding issues relating to the Boston documents.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

ENRON CHRONOLOGY
(compiled from public secondary sources)

Date	Event
Aug. 2000	Enron stock trading at $90 per share.
Sept. 10, 2000	Enron Chairman Ken Lay contributes more than $290,000 to the Bush campaign.
Jan. 3, 2001	Lay is one of the 474 people President-elect Bush names to advise his presidential transition team.
Feb. 2001	Jeffrey Skilling becomes Enron's CEO; Lay remains Chairman.
Feb. 22, 2001	Lay and other Enron officials meet with White House energy task force staff at the White House.
March 7, 2001	Lay and other Enron officials again meet with energy task force staff.
April 17, 2001	Vice President Cheney meets with Lay and other Enron officials.
April 30, 2001	President Bush sees Lay at a literacy foundation fundraiser in Texas; Enron stock is trading at almost $60 a share.
May 17, 2001	Energy task force report is issued.
June 5, 2001	Senior Advisor Karl Rove divests his stocks in energy, defense, and pharmaceutical companies; Rove owned holdings worth more than $100,000 in each Enron, Boeing, General Electric, and Pfizer.
June 24, 2001	Vice President Cheney has his last contact with Lay at a conference.
June 30, 2001	White House acknowledges Rove's involvement in developing the administration's energy policy at a time when he owned stock in energy companies.
Aug. 7, 2001	Officials from a German subsidiary of Enron meet with energy task force staff.
Aug. 14, 2001	Lay takes over as Enron CEO after Skilling resigns.
Oct. 10, 2001	Member of Vice President's staff meets with Enron officials to discuss energy policy; Enron's financial position is not discussed.

Oct. 15, 2001	Lay calls Commerce Secretary Don Evans while Evans is in Russia on a trade mission; the call concerns Enron energy project in India and does not relate to Enron's financial difficulties.
Oct. 16, 2001	Enron reports loss of $618 million for third quarter and discloses that transactions involving partnerships run by CFO Andrew Fastow had reduced shareholder equity by $1.2 billion.
Oct. 17, 2001	SEC notifies Enron that it has begun an inquiry into the Fastow partnership transactions; Enron and 401(k) administrator Northern Trust "lock down" Enron retirement funds, barring employees from selling shares of Enron stock.
Oct. 22, 2001	Enron publicly acknowledges the SEC inquiry into possible conflicts of interest relating to its dealings with partnerships run by CFO Fastow; news causes Enron stock to fall by more than 20%.
Oct. 23, 2001	Enron states that it may have to issue additional stock because of shortfalls from partnership investments; Lay tries to reassure investors in conference call.
Oct. 24, 2001	Fastow resigns under pressure.
Oct. 25, 2001	Enron draws down $3 billion from its lines of credit.
Oct. 26, 2001	Lay calls Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan to provide information about Enron; Greenspan takes no action in response to the call; Lay also calls Secretary Evans, who is out of town.
Oct. 28, 2001	Lay calls Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill to provide a heads up on Enron's precarious financial condition as it might relate to the capital markets; O'Neill takes no action to assist the company.
Oct. 29, 2001	Secretary Evans returns Lay's call. Lay asks if Evans can do anything to influence Moody's decision to downgrade Enron's credit rating; Evans takes no action; at a previously scheduled lunch, Evans and O'Neill discuss the Lay calls and agree that no action should be taken; Enron's credit is downgraded.
Oct. 31, 2001	SEC announces that it has upgraded its Enron inquiry into a formal investigation.
Late Oct. Early Nov.	Enron President Greg Whalley has six to eight conversations with Peter Fisher, Treasury Undersecretary for Domestic Finance, including one in which Whalley asks Fisher to encourage Enron's lenders to give Enron a credit extension; Fisher takes no action.

REV_00138980

Nov. 2, 2001	Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham calls Lay to talk about Enron's financial problems; Lay does not ask for help and Abraham offers none; Enron's auditor, Arthur Andersen, reports to Enron that it has found possible criminal actions in the company's financial management.
Nov. 5, 2001	Enron seeks $2 billion in capital as it struggles to keep its credit rating from falling to junk bond status.
Nov. 6, 2001	Enron's stock falls below $10 a share.
Nov. 8, 2001	Lay again calls Secretary O'Neill to discuss Enron's deteriorating financial condition; former Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin calls Fisher to ask whether the administration could intervene on behalf of Enron with bond-rating agencies to avoid reduction of Enron's credit rating; Fisher takes no action; Enron announces financial statements from 1997 are "unreliable" and may have overstated income by $600 million.
Nov. 9, 2001	Enron files documents with the SEC revising financial statements for the past five years to reflect $567 million in losses; Enron fires two executives connected to the Fastow partnerships.

ATTORNEY-CLIENT COMMUNICATION

Brett,

I'm putting the finishing touches on a draft brief I hope to send around by Wednesday.

It would help if you could give me some guidance on the following: do you anticipate another interim release of Reagan records before the end of the month (and, if so, by when and approx. how many pages)? Or, are you planning to hold off until all remaining records are reviewed? Thanks.

Craig

It is entirely appropriate for us to listen to the policy views of interested individuals, whether it be to (and through) the offices of Public Liaison, Legislative Affairs, Intergovernmental Affairs, Political Affairs, or some other appropriate mechanism. But decisions are made on the merits, of course, so no one should be under any misimpression about how the Administration's policy decisions are and will be made.

Hi Brett & Courtney - Did you have specific comments on the tort reform paper that we circulated at last week's meeting? As you know, we're hoping to put together another version that reflects the group's comments. Among other things, if there are proposals you think are not worth supporting and proposals that you think we should pursue, it would be very helpful to have your input. Any other thoughts are also welcome. Thanks very much.

Just picked up your note; sorry for the delay. I think you'd want to start with the top 2; if either of those is acceptable, we know there'll be no protest from Carlin & Co./NARA -- as you know, this is a very anomalous appointment process. (He'll insist on consultation if look below the top two, but not as between them.) Fall-back or follow-on is certainly available to dig deeper, but it'd seem most efficient to start with the two that emerged as front-runners. If that seems sensible, I think the easiest way to arrange interviews is for us to agree on a time that'd work for you and then call to invite each down -- to your office, say, for a half-hour's chat. If you don't mind my sitting in, I may be able to help you elicit some reactions on declass philosophy, priorities, etc. that seem to tumble out when they're asked about specifics of the current system -- and may be able to help question/spin out some themes that emerged the other day. John may want to be there, as well, to form an impression. How does all that sound? Times? Etc. Thanks. Steve

Some additional specifics on future CA9 vacancies:
-- There are 3 California Ninth Circuit judges now eligible for senior status (Pregerson, Reinhardt, and Tashima). All 3 were appointed by Democratic Presidents. Based solely on the party affiliation of the Presidents who appointed them, which is admittedly a rough guide, one would NOT expect these judges to take senior status unless forced to do so by health or other considerations.
-- During the President's first term, there are 4 other judges who will become eligible to take senior status: 1 California (Fernandez, May 2002); 1 Oregon (O'Scannlain, March 2002), 1 Idaho (Nelson, November 2003), and 1 that might be either California or Idaho (Trott, December 2004). These judges were all appointed by Republican Presidents. Based on the party affiliation of the Presidents who appointed them (again a rough predictive guide), one might expect these judges to take senior status when eligible.

The Privilege Log letter is drafted for Mike Chertoff's signature as WH preferred that it come from DOJ today or tomorrow. The other is simply a cover letter on a Connecticut Special Revenue Commission transcript from May 1976, in which Paul Rico was the witness and Austin McGuigan was the prosecutor. McGuigan is on Burton's witness list for the Feb. hearings. Please give me comments this afternoon; both of these letters should go out tomorrow. Thanks. Faith

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

January 18, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to the letter of your Chief Counsel, James C. Wilson, dated January 11, 2002, which requested a copy of the transcript of a hearing before a Connecticut or Massachusetts Commission on Special Revenue in May or April of 1976. Based upon a subsequent conversation with Committee staff, we have identified the enclosed transcript as the document you are seeking. It pertains to a hearing on May 3-4, 1976 before the Connecticut Commission on Special Revenue.

I hope that this information is helpful. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional assistance regarding this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

Patrick O'Brien
Deputy Assistant Attorney General

Draft January 17, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to respond to requests articulated at the Committee's hearing on December 13, 2001 for a log of the documents relating to the Boston FBI matter that were subject to the President's claim of executive privilege.

Enclosed for your review is a log of those documents. I was going to provide this log to you at the meeting that was scheduled for January 10, 2002. Our expectation was that we would describe the documents to Committee staff and hear the staff's explanation of how the Committee's investigative needs relate to particular documents, which would allow the Committee and the Department to explore together the possibilities for further accommodating the Committee's needs. Consequently, we were very disappointed that you canceled the meeting and we hope that we can reschedule it in the near future.

Sincerely,

Michael Chertoff
Assistant Attorney General

Enclosure

Draft January 17, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to respond to requests articulated at the Committee's hearing on December 13, 2001 for a log of the documents relating to the Boston FBI matter that were subject to the President's claim of executive privilege.

Enclosed for your review is a log of those documents. I was going to provide this log to you at the meeting that was scheduled for January 10, 2002. Our expectation was that we would describe the documents to Committee staff and hear the staff's explanation of how the Committee's investigative needs relate to particular documents, which would allow the Committee and the Department to explore together the possibilities for further accommodating the Committee's needs. We especially wanted to advise you about one document relevant to the Salvati matter, which you have identified as a focus of the Committee's interest. Consequently, we were very disappointed that you canceled the meeting and we hope that we can reschedule it in the near future.

Sincerely,

Michael Chertoff
Assistant Attorney General

Enclosure

Looks good. My only comment is that the second paragraph seems strange after the first. Consider whether (1) the order ought to be inverted, or (2) the first paragaraph ought to be omitted. I realize option 2 undercuts the general approach, but the second paragraph may do that in and of itself, even if it is accompanied by paragraph 1.

January 23, 2002

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
U.S. House of Representatives
2204 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-0529

Dear Congressman Waxman:

This letter responds to your letter of January 15, 2002. As you know, numerous committees of the House and Senate and many executive branch departments and agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Justice, are currently conducting official investigations into the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy. To the extent any duly authorized investigative bodies may believe I have information relevant to their investigations, I will respond in a timely, orderly, and appropriate way to their requests.

As has been reported publicly, I had a brief conversation with Kenneth Lay on October 11. He had left a message for me on October 10, I left him a return message later that day, and he then returned my call and we talked on October 11. Our conversation addressed the prospects for an economic stimulus bill along the lines the President had articulated. Other than discussions with my wife about the unfortunate aspects of the Enron bankruptcy, I am not aware of any additional information responsive to your letter to me.

Please be assured that the President and I share your concern about the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy, including the consequences for Enron employees and shareholders. The President has assured the American people that he will seek appropriate policy changes that might help to prevent similar occurrences in the future. Indeed, two cabinet-level working groups are now examining the pension regulation and financial disclosure issues presented by Enron's situation. In short, the Administration's resources are fully devoted to appropriate investigative, law enforcement, and policy actions relating to the Enron bankruptcy.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

ENERGY POLICY: Cheney Must Disclose: How Task Force Operated (St. Paul) Editorial
St. Paul Pioneer, January 20, 2002
Long before Enron imploded in public view, there were widely expressed concerns about how Vice President Dick Cheney's National Energy Policy Development Group crafted what became the Bush energy plan. That plan, about to find its second wind as the administration and Congress gear up, was unveiled with fanfare to a friendly audience at St. Paul's RiverCentre last May. Cheney has refused to reveal detail about how his task force operated and to whom it spoke. The General Accounting Office has sued to force the White House to build a window into this particular part of its massive stone wall of secrecy.
Cheney, a former Texas energy tycoon, last week felt the heat from Enron cronyism in the Bush administration and Congress. That heat resulted in the vice president disclosing that his energy task force had met six times with Enron representatives. Again, no details have been forthcoming, as the administration cites executive privilege for conducting business on an array of issues in deep secrecy.
History has shown the privilege worth protecting from promiscuous snoops elsewhere in official Washington or among enemies without. In the long run, however, refusing to disclose the workings of the energy task force will do more political damage than principled good for Cheney. There is not yet evidence that any of at least 35 bigwigs in the Bush administration acted improperly because Enron had enriched their careers or wallets. But the scope of those relationships demand full disclosure, not dribs and drabs of information from a White House that seems to have no sense of organized political damage control on the Enron matter.
There is also no reason to have confidence that the investigations circus on Capitol Hill has value other than to produce evidence to the point of how the Enron scams happened, with the rich guys cashing in, leaving their loyal employees in ruin.
Cheney's task force is a part of the story about who did what for whom inside and outside of government. The whole of it should be turned over to the General Accounting Office, which is an agency independent of those in Congress and the administration who got money or jobs from Enron.
It is vital for this administration, pressing a war on terrorism, to retain the public confidence and broad support it has earned since Sept. 11. Getting all the Enron dealings, including Cheney's, out in the open is a political and security imperative.

Draft: 1/21/02 11:15 a.m.

January 23, 2002

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
U.S. House of Representatives
2204 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-0529

Dear Congressman Waxman:

This letter responds to your letter of January 15, 2002. As you know, numerous committees of the House and Senate and many executive branch departments and agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Justice, are currently conducting official investigations into the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy. To the extent any duly authorized investigative bodies may believe I have information relevant to their investigations, I will respond in a timely, orderly, and appropriate way to their requests.

As has been reported publicly, I had a brief conversation with Kenneth Lay on October 11. He had left a message for me on October 10, I left him a return message later that day, and he then returned my call and we talked on October 11. Our conversation addressed the prospects for an economic stimulus bill along the lines the President had articulated. Other than discussions with my wife about the unfortunate aspects of the Enron bankruptcy, I am not aware of any additional information responsive to your letter to me.

Please be assured that the President and I share your concern about the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy, including the consequences for Enron employees and shareholders. The President has assured the American people that he will seek appropriate policy changes that might help to prevent similar occurrences in the future. Indeed, two cabinet-level working groups are now examining the pension regulation and financial disclosure issues presented by Enron's situation. In short, the Administration's resources are fully devoted to appropriate investigative, law enforcement, and policy actions relating to the Enron bankruptcy.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

Subject: political travel

I'm trying to get a better understanding of trave procedures when it comes to sending Administration officials to do poltical events for our Republican candidates. Example:

Secretary Evans has agreed to speak to the SD Chamber of Commerce in Pierre, SD. We would also like him to do a fundraiser for John Thune. Because there would be a fundraiser in the same city as the SD chamber event, the Thune campaign is responsible for travel costs. (I conferred with Toner on FEC law)

FEC law also states that a campaign can use a corporate plane if first class airfare is reimbursed for each person traveling before the plane takes off. Legally, it is ok for Thune to fly Evans on a corporate plane.

But, my question for you is will you allow Evans to fly on a corporate plane?? If we find an owner who allows his plane to be used frequently for political travel and the company doesn't have significant business before the federal government, can we generally operate under the assumption that this will work?? This is particularly important for far away states like SD. Please advise.

Thanks.

Enron Chief Lay Steps Down (Orlando Sentinel)
By Tamara Lytle | Sentinel Bureau Chief
The Orlando Sentinel, January 24, 2002
WASHINGTON -- Enron Corp. Chairman Kenneth Lay resigned Wednesday night as the investigation into the company's collapse headed to Capitol Hill today in full force, with more tales of greed, cover-ups, corruption and heartbreak on the agenda.
"This was a decision the board and I reached in cooperation with our creditors' committee," Lay, 59, said in a statement released by Enron. "I want to see Enron survive, and for that to happen we need someone at the helm who can focus 100 percent of his efforts on reorganizing the company and preserving value for our creditors and hard-working employees."
Lay will retire as an Enron employee, but will remain on the company's board of directors.
In the 1980s, Lay was president of Florida Gas Co. in Winter Park, which later became part of Enron. He has been under fire for encouraging Enron employees to keep buying the company's stock even as he and other top executives were quietly unloading millions of dollars worth of options.
Enron's lead outside auditor laid the groundwork Wednesday for a dramatic opening to the congressional hearings by contesting a subpoena to testify today about his role in the destruction of financial documents.
A House panel, nonetheless, is compelling fired Arthur Andersen LLP partner David Duncan to appear. Andersen, the auditing firm based in Chicago, dismissed Duncan last week for his role in the destruction of Enron documents after federal regulators began investigating possible accounting improprieties.
Beyond the daily revelations of corporate mismanagement and suspected misconduct, the hearings will be a political powder keg as Democrats try to focus attention on President Bush's relationship with the Texas energy-trading giant that dished out millions in campaign contributions to Republicans.
Analysts say it's too early to know whether Bush will be hurt by his association with Enron and Lay. Company executives had a direct line to the administration but apparently were rebuffed when they asked for help as bankruptcy loomed.
That lack of a clear quid pro quo could mean Enron won't severely damage Bush, said Paul Light of the Brookings Institution think tank.
"It's a significant tropical storm, but you don't have the ingredients to produce a hurricane," Light said.
But Enron's spectacular collapse will cast a broad shadow as no fewer than seven congressional committees launch hearings in the next three weeks.
Democrats, too, have connections to the company. The campaign of Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., for instance, received $8,000 from Enron.
"When mud starts being thrown, everyone gets a little dirty," said Tripp Baird of the think tank Heritage Foundation.

Seventy-one percent of the Senate received contributions from Enron, as did 43 percent of the House.
The campaign system, by which rich contributors enjoy special consideration, is likely to have a starring role in the hearings and could spur Congress to tighten campaign-finance laws.
Walking wounded
Enron, the seventh-largest company in the country, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in December after admitting it had hidden vast debts in secret partnerships. Thousands of workers lost their jobs and investors lost huge sums when the stock price plunged from triple digits to pennies. Florida's state pension fund alone lost more than $300 million.
The luckless investors included Enron retirees who lost their life savings. Now Congress is investigating the actions of top executives, auditor Andersen, the Bush administration and the systems that allowed such a huge financial collapse to occur.
The investigation will last months, if not years. The congressional inquiry is in addition to criminal investigations by the Justice Department, the Securities and Exchange Commission and Labor Department.
The Senate Governmental Affairs Committee wants to know what the government should have done to prevent the disaster. Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., will chair the first hearing today. Former SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt will testify.
Lieberman will look at the Bush administration's ties to Enron, but he has a few of his own. He received $2,000 in campaign donations from Enron. The New Democratic Network that he founded received $10,000. His former chief of staff, Michael Lewan, was a lobbyist for Enron.
Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., received $1,000 from Enron. Robert Rubin, former President Clinton's treasury secretary, tried to help Enron when it was clear that an Enron bankruptcy would hurt his company, Citigroup.
Democrats, however, point out that while many of them picked up Enron campaign checks, the bulk of the company's largesse went to Republicans.
Money and access
Enron has donated $6 million to federal candidates since 1989, according to the Center for Responsive Politics. Three-quarters of it went to Republicans.
Lay and other Enron colleagues gave $312,000 to the president's Texas gubernatorial campaigns. Lay also was one of the biggest contributors to Bush's presidential campaign. Enron kicked in $250,000 for last year's GOP convention and even made its private jet available to the Bush campaign.
Once in office, the Bush team granted Enron easy access.
As Enron's troubles worsened last fall, executives called two Bush Cabinet officials asking for help, apparently without success. Enron had earlier received help from Vice President Dick Cheney when he pressed officials in India on Enron's behalf concerning a power plant. The White House said Cheney was going to bat for an American company because tax dollars were at stake.
Cheney also met privately with Lay as he was formulating the administration's energy policy last year. The vice president's task force met six times with Enron. Cheney, citing executive privilege, is refusing a congressional auditor's request for information about those meetings.
U.S. Rep. Henry Waxman of California said the policies that emerged from Cheney's task force -- such as deregulation of the electric-utilities market -- mirrored Enron's agenda. Waxman, a top Democrat on the House Government Reform Committee, tried without success to pressure the White House to release information about the meetings. Other committees will jump into the fray, starting with today's hearing by the House Energy and Commerce Committee that is looking into the actions of Arthur Andersen.
Andersen was Enron's auditor when it was misstating its earnings and other financial measures that Wall Street and investors use to judge stocks. Andersen officials said they made a mistake in judging one of Enron's off-the-books partnerships, but blamed Enron for withholding other crucial data.
The House Financial Services Committee will examine the apparent conflicts of interest among Wall Street analysts whose firms rely on fees from companies they are supposed to be independently evaluating. That conflict was highlighted in the Enron case when 16 of 17 energy analysts urged investors to buy Enron stock despite problems with its business model.
The Senate Commerce Committee already has heard from devastated Enron retirees who have little left of their nest eggs. On Feb. 4, the committee is scheduled to hear from Lay.

Some lawmakers want to prevent similar heartbreak by changing retirement-savings rules. Some ideas being considered: Providing investment advice to workers; limiting how much 401(k) money can be invested in company stock; and allowing workers to divest themselves of company stock. At Enron, workers younger than 50 could not sell the company stock that was funded through an employer match.

Congress, aware of the vast number of Americans invested in the stock market, likely will propose changes to pension and accounting rules, as well.

The hearings also will bring new information to light that could determine whether the business fiasco becomes a political scandal.

Independent pollster John Zogby said Democrats could land some punches because the public already perceives Bush as tied to the oil industry. Cheney and Bush were in the Texas oil business.

But the Sept. 11 tragedy helped renew Americans' faith in government, so dragging out a partisan battle over Enron could backfire, he said. Still, analysts agreed, Democrats are fighting a tight race for control of Congress this year and likely will use the Enron mess to portray Republicans as friends of the rich.

Reformers in Congress are just a few signatures short of the 218 supporters needed to force House leaders to vote on a campaign-finance overhaul. Rep. Corrine Brown, D-Jacksonville, said she might provide one of the crucial votes because of the Enron mess.

"It seems to me that this is a perfect time to limit the excessive influence money plays in Washington," said Brown, who received no contributions from Enron.

INTRODUCTION

In this action, plaintiffs ask that the Court interpret 5 U.S.C. § 2954, a statute enacted in 1928 but "yet to be adjudicated in court," to permit access by a minority of the members of the House Committee on Government Reform to any information contained in the files of any agency within the committee's jurisdiction. At its core, then, this action is a controversy between the Executive and Legislative branches over access to information in the possession of executive officials, and a controversy between the minority and majority members of the House Committee on Government Reform. The Court should decline to wade into this political thicket. Separation of powers principles dictate that this controversy be sorted out in the political realm, not in this or any other court. Accordingly, the Court should decline to interpret Section 2954 and dismiss this action.

Even if the Court were to entertain this intra- and inter-branch dispute, plaintiffs cannot prevail as a matter of statutory interpretation. Plaintiffs interpret Section 2954 solely with reference to two words in the text of the statute, disregarding entirely Congress's readily ascertainable purpose, which is completely at odds with the interpretation plaintiffs advance. Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment ("Pl. Mem."), at 13. This is not the manner in which any court, including the current Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit, interprets statutory language, even purportedly "plain" language. Read in its proper context, Section 2954 is far from the sweeping grant of authority plaintiffs advocate. Rather, the statute was enacted to preserve access to a limited universe of agency reports for members of two of Congress' numerous committees. This is not simply the convenient "litigating position" of the Executive Branch, Pl. Mem. at 2, but a longstanding interpretation of Section 2954 that is consistent with Congress's plain intent. Indeed, the Congressional Research Service itself has consistently interpreted Section 2954 in the same, narrow manner. Adjusted census data, the information sought by plaintiffs, does not fall within Section 2954's narrow scope. Accordingly, the Secretary is entitled to judgment.[1]

Moreover, to interpret Section 2954 as plaintiffs propose would raise serious doubts about the constitutionality of the statute, which, in plaintiffs' view, admits of no exceptions, even for materials that are protected by Executive privilege. If Congress had intended to vest such sweeping authority in the minority, indeed in only a fraction of the members of only one House and one Senate committee, raising obvious and substantial separation of powers concerns, one would expect that the legislative history would at least hint at such an intention. To the contrary, however, Congress had no such intention, and never believed that it was vesting in these members alone a power Congress itself does not possess as a body. The grave constitutional doubts attributable to plaintiffs' interpretation of Section 2954 may easily be avoided by interpreting the statute in light of its plain purpose. For this additional reason, plaintiffs' constitutionally doubtful interpretation should be rejected, and judgment should be granted in favor of the Secretary.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs seek adjusted Census 2000 data based on 5 U.S.C. § 2954, which provides in pertinent part:

> An executive agency, on request of the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives, or of any seven members thereof . . . shall submit any information requested of it relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of the committee.[2]

Section 2954 is derived from section 2 of the Act of May 29, 1928, 45 Stat. 996. Section 1 of that Act provided for the repeal of 128 statutes requiring the submission of reports to Congress,

[1] Because the Secretary has presented matters outside the pleadings, this motion is styled, in the alternative, as one for summary judgment. However, those matters consist only of legislative history, which the Court may notice, and documents created by the Congressional Research Service which, although instructive, are not critical to the Court's disposition of this action. Thus, the Secretary also maintains that he is entitled to judgment on the pleadings. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(c).

[2] As plaintiffs note, the House Committee on Government Operations has since been renamed the Committee on Government Reform.

most of which either had become obsolete or served no useful purpose. See S. Rep. No. 1320, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 2; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3 (attached as Exhibit A to the Declaration of Timothy Zick). A study by the Bureau of Efficiency had recommended that many of these reports be eliminated. S. Rep. No. 1320, at 1; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, at 2 (Zick Decl. Ex. A, at 3, 8). In addition, some of the subject reports contained information that Congress determined could be more efficiently provided in some other form, upon request by the named committees. See S. Rep. No. 1320, at 3; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, at 4 (Zick Decl. Ex. A, at 5, 10).

Section 2, which has been re-enacted as 5 U.S.C. § 2954, was intended to enable Congress to obtain, if needed, the information theretofore contained in the discontinued reports. The House Report accompanying Section 2954 states:

> To save any question of the House of Representatives to have furnished to it any of the information contained in the reports proposed to be abolished, a provision has been added to the bill requiring such information to be furnished to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments or upon the request of any seven members thereof[.]

H. Rep. No. 1757, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 6 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 12) (emphasis added). Similarly, the Senate Report states:

> This section makes it possible to require any report discontinued by the language of this bill to be resubmitted to either House upon its necessity becoming evident to the membership of either body.

S. Rep. No. 1320, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6)(emphasis added).

Section 2954 is codified in a subchapter entitled "Reports" (5 U.S.C. Chapter 29, Subchapter II). It is one of four sections in the subchapter; the other sections concern reports to the Office of Personnel Management, when to submit annual reports to Congress, and a requirement that certain reports to Congress contain information on additional employee requirements. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 2951-2953.

REV_00139240

As plaintiffs note, in light of this plain legislative history, the Executive Branch has long interpreted Section 2954 to preserve the right of the members of the respective committees to obtain the information contained in the reports abolished by Section 1 of the Act. See Declaration of Michael Yeager, Exhibits J-L. For example, then Assistant Attorney General Scalia testified: "The legislative history of this provision . . . shows that it did not represent a Congressional judgment that such a minority should have the power to demand all information, but rather only the information which was formerly contained in annual reports which the Congress abolished." Yeager Declaration, Ex. K, at 29.

The Congressional Research Service has also consistently interpreted Section 2954 in a similar fashion. See Memorandum from American Law Division to Senate Government Operations Committee, dated January 15, 1975, at 2 ("The legislative history . . . indicates that the purpose of the 1928 Act was not to assert a sweeping right of Congress to obtain any information it might desire from the executive branch.") (Zick Decl., Exhibit B). See also "Investigative Oversight: An Introduction to the Law, Practice and Procedure of Congressional Inquiry, CRS Report No. 95-464A (April 7, 1995), at 24-25 (same) (Zick Decl., Exhibit C, at 39).

ARGUMENT

The Court should decline to referee what is essentially a political skirmish, pitting the desire of the minority party for information contained in the files of an executive agency against the agency's own desire to maintain the confidentiality of information in its files. If, however, the Court decides to entertain plaintiffs' claims, it should reject their sweeping interpretation of Section 2954. The ultimate issue in construing the statute is Congress' purpose. That purpose, which is readily apparent from Section 2954's context and history, is directly contrary to plaintiffs' interpretation. Moreover, plaintiffs' interpretation casts grave doubts on the constitutionality of the statute, and should be rejected for that additional reason.

I. THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS REMEDIAL DISCRETION AND DISMISS THIS ACTION

Plaintiffs, sixteen minority party members of the House Committee on Government

REV_00139241

Reform have requested, purportedly under the authority of Section 2954, the adjusted data compiled during the 2000 census. Stripped to its essence, this controversy is two-fold. Plaintiffs' desire for information held by an executive agency pits a minority party's request against the desires of the majority party, and aligns sixteen members of the Committee against the Secretary of Commerce.[3] Similar disputes have come before the D.C. Circuit from time to time. As that court has recognized, disputes over congressional access to Executive Branch records and information are neither novel nor matters for which judicial involvement is appropriate, considering the proper separation of powers among the branches and the array of political remedies available to settle intra- and inter-branch disputes. To the contrary, courts have been loathe to intervene in such disputes and, by refraining from judicial review, have left matters such as this for resolution between the political branches.[4] This matter is no different and the Court should refrain from adjudication as a matter of its equitable discretion.

The D.C. Circuit first applied what later came to be known as the doctrine of remedial, or equitable, discretion in United States v. AT&T Co., 551 F.2d 384 (D.C. Cir. 1976), appeal after remand, 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977). In that case, the Justice Department sought to block production of a telephone company's records of national security wiretaps to a congressional committee in response to a subpoena. Acknowledging the interests of both branches and the [3] Although eighteen minority members of the committee signed the original request for census information, only sixteen members have joined this lawsuit as plaintiffs.

[4] As plaintiffs note, on some occasions Congress and the subject agency have managed to come to an agreement on the production of information, even where the committee's jurisdiction over the matter was doubtful. See Pl. Mem. at 14. These examples in no way compromise the Justice Department's consistent, and longstanding, narrow interpretation of Section 2954. For one thing, the agencies involved in those instances all operated to some extent as independent agencies, and in Leach two of the agencies – OTS and FDIC – were not even represented by the Department. In addition, the agencies did not simply accede to a blanket request for all information requested, but rather sought and obtained assurances that privileged and personal information would be protected from disclosure. Moreover, these disclosures in no way waived the right of any agency to object to a request under Section 2954. Rather, these disclosures appear to illustrate the core of the doctrine of remedial discretion – the viability of political compromise, even under trying circumstances.

inherent difficulty in any judicial effort to balance those interests, 551 F.2d at 394, the court noted that "[t]he legislative and executive branches have a long history of settlement of disputes that seemed irreconcilable," id., and declined to resolve the case, requesting instead that the parties seek a negotiated solution. In so doing, the court noted that a judicial resolution would not necessarily protect the interests of both branches and could alter the constitutional separation of powers:

> This dispute between the legislative and executive branches has at least some elements of the political question doctrine. A court decision selects a victor, and tends thereafter to tilt the scales. A compromise worked out between the branches is most likely to meet their essential needs and the country's constitutional balance.

In a subsequent opinion, which again sought to guide a negotiated solution rather than impose a judicial determination of one branch's right to prevail, the court further explained that judicial abstention in cases of this nature actually fosters the type of inter-branch dynamics contemplated by the constitutional separation of powers:

> The framers, rather than attempting to define and allocate all government power in minute detail, relied, we believe, on the expectation that where conflicts in scope of authority arose between coordinate branches, a spirit of dynamic compromise would promote resolution of the dispute in the manner most likely to result in efficient and effective functioning of our governmental system. Under this view, the coordinate branches of government do not exist in an exclusively adversarial relationship to one another when a conflict arises. Rather, each branch should take of an implicit constitutional mandate to seek optimal accommodation through a realistic evaluation of the needs of the conflicting branches in the particular fact situation. This aspect of our constitutional scheme avoids the mischief of polarization of disputes.

567 F.2d 121, 127.

Applying this same doctrine, the court in United States v. House of Representatives, 556 F. Supp. 150 (D.D.C. 1983), declined to entertain a declaratory judgment action concerning the rights of a House committee to subpoena documents over which the President asserted executive privilege:

> When constitutional disputes arise concerning the respective powers of the Legislative and Executive Branches, judicial intervention should be delayed until all possibilities for settlement have been exhausted.... Judicial restraint is essential to maintain the delicate balance of powers among the branches established by the Constitution.

556 F. Supp. at 152 (citation omitted).

Similar concerns for the proper functioning of coordinate branches of the federal government have led the D.C. Circuit to refrain from exercising jurisdiction over litigation brought by individual members of Congress when such disputes merely reflected extensions of legislative controversies. The D.C. Circuit developed the doctrine of remedial or equitable discretion to give due regard for separation of powers concerns in cases brought by legislators where other doctrines, such as standing and political question, were not a sufficient means of articulating the prudential separation of powers concerns which such cases presented. See Riegle v. Federal Open Market Committee, 656 F.2d 873, 880-81 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1082 (1981). The Riegle court stated that "[t]he most satisfactory means of translating our separation of powers concerns into principled decisionmaking is through a doctrine of circumscribed equitable discretion" to be applied in cases "[w]here a congressional plaintiff could obtain substantial relief from his fellow legislators[.]" 656 F.2d at 881.

Where other remedies are available, "the doctrine of remedial discretion properly permits" the courts to consider separation of powers concerns and to avoid adjudicating intra- and inter-branch disputes. See Moore v. U.S. House of Representatives, 733 F.2d 946 (D.C. Cir. 1984) ("Congressional actions pose a real danger of misuse of the courts by members of Congress whose actual dispute is with their fellow legislators."), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1106 (1985). See also Melcher v. Federal Open Market Committee, 836 F. 2d 561 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (equitable discretion proper where potential relief existed in the form of new or repealed legislation); Leach v. Resolution Trust Corp., 860 F. Supp. 868 (D.D.C. 1994) (declining to give an expansive reading to a statutory provision to allow access by a ranking minority committee member to agency records otherwise exempt from disclosure under the FOIA).[5] Similarly, where individual members have sought judicial review of executive action in advance of any action by Congress itself, courts have applied their remedial discretion to withhold relief. Crockett v. Reagan, 720 F.2d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1251 (1984); Lowry v. Reagan, 676 F. Supp. 333, 339 (D.D.C. 1987).[6] Application of the doctrine of remedial discretion does not turn on whether the court could fashion a remedy, but rather on "respect for a co-equal branch of government" to order its own affairs. Vander Jagt v. O'Neill, 699 F.2d 1166, 1176 (D. C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 823 (1983).

The same separation of powers concerns should lead this Court to dismiss plaintiffs' action. The request for the census information in the Secretary's possession was made by a group of minority members of the House Committee on Government Reform. Rather than invoke the authority of the full committee through a subpoena, or convince a chamber majority of their need for the information, these members ask the Court to decide that Section 2954 grants

[5] The court in Leach was not presented with a claim under Section 2954, and thus had no occasion to consider the statute's history, purpose, or scope. The dicta in Leach does not stand for the proposition that all requests for information under Section 2954 would fall outside the remedial discretion doctrine. Where, as here, there are other avenues of relief available, the doctrine counsels against judicial involvement.

[6] In Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012 (2000), the court dismissed for lack of standing a suit by several members of Congress challenging an executive order. The court noted that the remedial discretion doctrine had developed as an alternative application of separation of powers concerns following the development of special rules for standing in cases brought by Congressmen. The court held that the Supreme Court's dismissal of an action by several members of Congress for lack of standing in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997) governed the claims in Chenoweth. 181 F.3d 114-116. It noted, however, that the same result would apply under the doctrine of remedial discretion, as plaintiffs could seek a political solution through legislation. 181 F.3d at 116.

any seven members of the committee carte blanche with respect to any and all information within its jurisdiction. The Court should not select a victor in such intra- and inter-branch disputes "until circumstances indicate that judicial intervention is necessary." That showing has not been made here. Separation of powers concerns dictate that plaintiffs first seek to convince their majority colleagues of their need for the adjusted Census figures they seek before requesting a ruling of first impression from the Court.

Whether this controversy is viewed as a one between the sixteen plaintiffs and their majority colleagues, or one between plaintiffs and the Secretary, this Court should abstain from deciding the dispute. This is precisely the type of controversy for which the remedial discretion doctrine was devised. Indeed, even if the requests had the full support of the House, the same separation of powers concerns underlying the decisions in AT&T and House of Representatives, discussed above, would still strongly favor judicial restraint. Without that support, the case for the exercise of equitable discretion is even more compelling.

II. SECTION 2954 IS NOT A SWEEPING GRANT OF AUTHORITY

If the Court is inclined to referee this inter-Branch dispute, it should grant summary judgment in favor of the Secretary. Section 2954 must be construed with its narrow purpose firmly in mind. Congress' intent in enacting Section 2954 was not to grant broad access to all information in the possession of agencies, but rather to preserve access to information formerly contained in a series of reports required to be submitted to Congress. That purpose is readily apparent from the context of the entire statute, and from the accompanying House and Senate Reports, which are quoted above. It cannot be ignored merely because Section 2954 uses "language of command" (shall) and a "broad adjective" (any). Pl. Mem. at 6, 9.

A. Section 2954 Preserves Access Only To "Reports"

Although this is the first time any court has been asked to interpret Section 2954, plaintiffs ask the Court to ignore the statute's context and its legislative history. As the Supreme Court and the Ninth Circuit have made clear on numerous occasions, while courts begin with the statutory language, they are not shackled to it, particularly where, as here, the statutory text is at loggerheads with Congress' plain intent. Statutory interpretation is not, as plaintiffs argue, merely a black letter exercise. The Supreme Court has repeatedly emphasized that "'the meaning of statutory language, plain or not, depends on context.'" Holloway v. United States, 526 U.S. 1, 7 (1999) (quoting Brown v. Gardner, 513 U.S. 115, 118 (1994)) (quoting King v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 502 U.S. 215, 221 (1991)). Thus, the task of statutory construction begins, but does not end, with the specific words or phrases used by the drafters. See Holloway, 526 U.S. at 6. See also Robinson v. Shell Oil Co., 519 U.S. 337, 340 (1997) ("The plainness or ambiguity of statutory language is determined by reference to the language itself, the specific context in which that language is used, and the broader context of the statute as a whole.").

"The circumstances of the enactment of particular legislation may persuade a court that Congress did not intend words of common meaning to have their literal effect." Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 266 (1981). The circumstances of Section 2954's enactment demonstrate that Congress did not intend the sweeping, literal meaning plaintiffs advocate. The Act under consideration must be construed as a whole. Lexecon, Inc. v. Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, 523 U.S. 26, 35 (1998). Section 1 of the Act required the repeal of statutes mandating the submission of 128 specific reports to the House and Senate Committees. Section 2 of the Act, later codified as Section 2954, was enacted contemporaneously with Section 1. Section 2, as the legislative history makes abundantly clear, was merely intended to preserve access to the reports abolished by Section 1 of the Act. See S. Rep. No. 1320, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4; H. Rep. No. 1757, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 6 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6, 12).

Further persuasive demonstration of the limited nature of Section 2954's reach can be found in the congressional design. As noted, Section 2954 is part of a subchapter entitled "Reports" (5 U.S.C. Chapter 29, Subchapter II). It is one of four sections in the subchapter; the other sections concern reports to the Office of Personnel Management, when to submit annual reports to Congress, and a requirement that certain reports to Congress contain information on additional employee requirements. Of course, "the title of a statute and the heading of a section" are "tools available for the resolution of a doubt" concerning the reach of a provision.

Brotherhood of R.R. Trainmen v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 331 U.S. 519, 528-29 (1947). See also Almendarez-Torres v. United States, 523 U.S. 224, 234 (1998) (resorting to title, and concluding title was "reinforced" by legislative history).

Placing Section 2954 within its proper context, including its position in the United States Code, plainly indicates that the provision was intended to preserve a right to specific "reports," not to grant a minority of committee members access to any and all information located in the files of any agency within the committee's jurisdiction. Further evidence of Congress' narrow design is readily discernible from the statute's brief, but clear, history.

B. Congress' Narrow Purpose Is Readily Apparent

The language of the statute "ordinarily" controls, but only "'[a]bsent a clearly expressed legislative intent to the contrary.'" Central Mont. Elec. Power Coop. v. Administrator of Bonneville Power Admin., 840 F.2d 1472, 1477 (9th Cir. 1988) (quoting Consumer Product Safety Comm'n v. GTE Sylvania, Inc., 447 U.S. 102, 108 (1980)). Indeed, the Ninth Circuit has expressly held that departure from the literal language of the statute is appropriate "where the legislative history clearly indicates that Congress meant something other than what it said." In re Catapult Entertainment, Inc., 165 F.3d 747, 753 (9th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 528 U.S. 924 (1999). See also Foxgord v. Hischemoeller, 820 F.2d 1030, 1034 (9th Cir.) ("This court may give effect to a clearly expressed legislative intent which is contrary to the language of the statute itself."), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 986 (1987). That is precisely the case here.

Moreover, courts are not confined to the "naked text" where guidance as to the meaning of statutory terms is readily available. Public Citizen v. United States Department of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 454 (1989). Nor are courts required to discard common sense when interpreting statutes, or to ignore the plain purpose of a statute, particularly where, as here, it can easily be ascertained. The plain meaning rule "is rather an axiom of experience than a rule of law, and does not preclude consideration of persuasive evidence if it exists." Boston Sand & Gravel Co. v. United States, 278 U.S. 41, 48 (1928) (Holmes, J.). See also United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns., Inc., 310 U.S. 534, 543-44 (1940) ("When aid to construction of the meaning of words, as used in the statute, is available, there certainly can be no 'rule of law' which forbids its use, however clear the words may appear on 'superficial examination.'") (citations omitted). Particularly where matters of first impression are concerned, courts should not ignore readily discernible indicia of congressional intent. See Foxgord, 820 F.2d at 1034 (concluding that case of first impression presented "exceptional circumstances" calling for an explanation of the "historical basis" for Congress' enactment).

As plaintiffs point out, although Section 2954 has been codified for more than seventy years, it has never been interpreted by any court. Despite the novelty of the issue presented, however, plaintiffs ask this Court to wear interpretive blinders and ignore both the context in which Section 2954 was enacted, and clear, identical expressions of legislative purpose in both the House and Senate Reports. Notwithstanding plaintiffs' efforts to cloud the statements in those reports, they make unmistakably clear that Congress did not intend to vest in any seven members of the Committee on Government Reform the broadest possible right of access to agency information, but rather to preserve the right to obtain, in the words of the House Report, "any of the information contained in the reports proposed to be abolished," or, as the Senate Report stated, "any report discontinued by the language of this bill." S. Rep. No. 1320, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4; H. Rep. No. 1757, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 6 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6, 12).

The Supreme Court has repeatedly resorted to the legislative history in the face of similar contentions that "plain meaning" controls. The Court has rejected literal readings of statutory provisions where the "natural sense" of the statute, in light of its intended purpose, leads it toward a "common sense view" of the matter. Heckler v. Edwards, 465 U.S. 870, 879 (1984). See id. at 880-882 & n. 14 (examining "history of the enactment" and floor debates to discern congressional purpose). See also Associated General Contractors of California, Inc. v. California State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 530 (1983) ("[B]efore we hold that the statute is as broad as its words suggest, we must consider whether Congress intended such an open-ended meaning."). In Associated General Contractors, the Court rejected the contention that a union could recover under the Clayton Act, which made remedies available to "any person." Although it acknowledged the literal breadth of the statute, the Court examined the legislative history of the Act, including the "larger context in which the entire statute was debated." 459 U.S. at 530. Relying on statements in the legislative debate regarding the purpose of the Act, the Court held that the phrase "any person," although literally broad in scope, did not encompass the union's alleged injuries. Id.

More recently, in Lewis v. United States, 523 U.S. 155 (1998), the Court considered whether the federal Assimilative Crimes Act (ACA), which applies state law to a defendant's acts or omissions on federal enclaves that are "not made punishable by any enactment of Congress," precluded application of state law under the circumstances because several federal laws appeared to "punish" the acts in question. See id. at 159 (emphasis added). Again, although the language of the statute was broadly worded to encompass "any" congressional enactment, the Court consulted the legislative history to determine the "basic purpose" of the ACA, which it concluded was to fill gaps in federal criminal enclave law. In light of this history, the Court expressly rejected a "literal" interpretation of the statutory provision because it "would dramatically separate the statute from its intended purpose." Id. at 160. A literal interpretation of "any" enactment, the Court reasoned, would have created the very gaps the ACA was designed to fill. Id. at 161. Accordingly, the Court concluded "that Congress did not intend the relevant words – 'any enactment' – to carry an absolutely literal meaning." Id. at 162 (emphasis in original).

Similarly, in Public Citizen, supra, the Court expressly rejected a literal interpretation of the phrase "utilized" under the Federal Advisory Committee Act (FACA). Under the proposed interpretation, the Department of Justice would have been required to disclose information relating to its consultations with the American Bar Association concerning potential nominees for federal judgeships. The Court was "convinced" that Congress could not have intended a literal reading of the statute, which would have "extend[ed] FACA's requirements to any group of two or more persons, or at least any formal organization, from which the President or an Executive Agency seeks advice." Id. at 452. The Court explained: "A nodding acquaintance with FACA's purposes, as manifested by its legislative history and as recited in § 2 of the Act, reveals that it cannot have been Congress' intention" to extend FACA's requirements "to cover every formal and informal consultation between the President or an Executive agency and a group rendering advice." Id. at 453 (emphasis added). "Close attention to FACA's history" convinced the Court that a literal interpretation was inconsistent with the statute's purpose. Id. at 455.

A "nodding acquaintance" with Section 2954's purpose, as manifested by its legislative history, compels a similar result. The statute's purpose and origin are plainly set forth in the legislative history. Although Congress chose broad language, it plainly did not intend that Section 2954 create a sweeping tool for the gathering of any information that any seven members of the House Committee on Government Reform might desire. As the Supreme Court long ago stated:

> Frequently words of general meaning are used in a statute, words broad enough to include an act in question, and yet a consideration of the whole legislation, or of the circumstances surrounding its enactment, or of the absurd results which follow from giving such broad meaning to the words, makes it unreasonable to believe that the legislator intended to include the particular act.

Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U.S. 457, 459 (1892). Such is the case here. Congress merely intended to preserve legislators' right to require the production of the 128 reports eliminated by Section 1 of the Act, in the event members later determined that the information therein was critical to an issue within the committee's jurisdiction.

Indeed, even plaintiffs concede that the doctrine of "plain meaning," or literal interpretation, is not the hard-and-fast rule they claim it is. None of the cases plaintiffs rely upon raised any issue of incongruence between statutory language and congressional purpose. See Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 336-37 (2000) (finding clear intent in language and "context" of statute as a whole); id. at 360 ("the legislative history is neutral") (Souter, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). See also Lexecon, 523 U.S. at 39 (reviewing legislative history and concluding that, on balance, the history supported a literal reading of the statute); United States v. Gonzales, 520 U.S. 1, 6 (1997) ("Indeed, far from clarifying the statute, the legislative history only muddies the waters."). Thus, despite the apparent stridency of their position, the most plaintiffs can say with respect to the statutory directive "shall," for example, is that it is "ordinarily" language of command, or is a "general proposition" that guides courts with respect to interpretive issues. Pl. Mem. at 6, 7. Plaintiffs do not, and cannot, suggest that the literal language always controls, or that it must control even where the legislative history plainly contradicts their textual interpretation.

Courts should be particularly wary of endorsing literal interpretations that appear to countenance odd or troubling results. "Where the literal reading of a statutory term would 'compel an odd result,' we must search for other evidence of congressional intent to lend the term its proper scope." Public Citizen, supra, 491 U.S. at 454 (quoting Green v. Bock Laundry Machine Co., 490 U.S. 504, 509 (1989)). The odd, and constitutionally troubling (see III., infra), result compelled by plaintiffs' proposed interpretation is that, without ever having uttered a word on the matter, Congress purportedly vested in a small fraction of the membership of only two committees, and no others, an absolute right of access with regard to any information contained in the files of any agency whose activities fall within the jurisdiction of those committees. The scope of that proposed power is out of all proportion to Congress's own right of access, which although not expressly delineated, is not absolute. See Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109, 111 (1959) ("Broad as it is, the power [to investigate] is not, however, without limitations."). See also McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 177 (1927) (congressional investigations must pertain to subjects "on which legislation could be had"). Thus, to accept plaintiffs' view is to accept that Congress vested in any seven members of the House Committee on Government Reform a right of access broader in scope than that enjoyed by the body as a whole.

C. Plaintiffs Misconstrue the Legislative History

Plaintiffs themselves quote the clear, concise portions of the House and Senate Reports that clarify the narrow scope of Section 2954. Ironically, however, they do not believe themselves bound by the "plain meaning" of the language contained therein. Rather, plaintiffs seek to maneuver around the legislative history by misinterpreting it.

Section 1 of the Act abolished reports that were, in their then form, considered either useless or obsolete, or were thought to contain information that could be assembled upon request in another, more useful form. See S. Rep. No. 1320, at 3; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, at 2 (Zick Decl., Ex. A at 5, 8). At the time of enactment, Section 2 did not simply confer "a narrow right of access to obsolete information." Pl. Mem. at 11. Rather, it preserved legislators' access to the information in these reports, insofar as that information could be assembled in a report more useful in form or substance to the requesting members. Even a passing acquaintance with the brief legislative history demonstrates that it was the form of the reports, more than anything else, that caused Congress to conclude that their submission served no useful purpose.

This point was driven home in the House and Senate Reports. The additional portions of these reports quoted by plaintiffs (Pl. Mem. at 12) have no specific bearing on the issue in this case – the precise scope of Section 2 of the Act. The Reports simply state each committee's summary conclusion that reports generally, including some "303 reports required to be made to Congress by the executive departments and the independent establishments," S. Rep. No. 1320, at 4, were all of such poor quality as to be virtually useless:

> The committee desires to make the observation that it is easy in the enactment of general legislation on some subject for some one to suggest that a special report be made to Congress. Little attention is given to the character of the report that should be submitted, and the legislation goes in the statute books. The department makes the character of the report that it thinks will fit the legal requirement, and often it is entirely valueless for the purpose intended. . . . If any information is desired by any Member or Committee upon a particular subject that information can be better secured by a request made by an individual Member or committee so framed to bring out the special information desired. It would be helpful if in the future committees would be more careful as to the character and extent of requiring that reports be made to Congress in connection with the administration of legislation.

See S. Rep. No. 1320, at 4; H. R. Rep. No. 1757, at 6 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6, 12). Thus, in the view of each committee, members might be better served, in general, to make individual requests for desired information, and to frame their request for reports in a manner calculated to lead to the production of the most useful reports. This general observation says nothing about any right under Section 2954 itself to "particularized information." Pl. Mem. at 12.

Further, nothing in the Senate Report indicates any "intention to allow a broad right of access." Pl. Mem. at 11. To the contrary, immediately after the quotation plaintiffs take out of context (see Pl. Mem. at 12), the Senate Report plainly states that Section 2 of the Act "makes it possible to require any report discontinued by the language of this bill to be resubmitted to either House upon its necessity becoming evident to the membership of either body." S. Rep. No. 1320, at 4 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6) (emphasis added). In light of this clear statement, it is disingenuous to argue, as plaintiffs do, that the drafters "understood that they were granting broad authority and that they intended to do so." Pl. Mem. at 12.

III. PLAINTIFFS' SWEEPING INTERPRETATION RAISES SERIOUS CONSTITUTIONAL DOUBTS

In choosing between competing versions of statutory construction, it is axiomatic that a court must choose that which avoids constitutional question "if a serious doubt of constitutionality is raised" by the alternative interpretation. Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 (1932). The Supreme Court assumes that Congress "legislates in the light of constitutional limitations." Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 191 (1991). This approach "not only reflects the prudential concern that constitutional issues not be needlessly confronted, but also recognizes that Congress, like this Court, is bound by and swears an oath to uphold the Constitution." Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Florida Gulf Coast Building & Construction Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988).

The Supreme Court has indicated that the reluctance to confront or decide constitutional issues "is especially great where, as here, they concern the relative powers of coordinate branches of government." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 466. Absent some evidence that Congress at least considered the matter, the Court is "loath to conclude that Congress intended to press ahead into dangerous constitutional thickets[.]" Id. Thus, in Public Citizen, the Court declined to adopt a literal interpretation of FACA that would have brought the ABA and other consultive groups within the statutory orbit, fearing the separation of powers issues that would have been raised under such a broad interpretation of the statute. The legislative history, the Court determined, suggested a congressional intent contrary to the words it had chosen to include in the statute. Id. at 467. That history, the Court said, "counsels adherence to our rule of caution." Ibid.

Similar considerations counsel adherence to the rule of constitutional doubt in this case. Plaintiffs' interpretation of Section 2954 requires submission on demand by the Secretary of any information in the agency's files on the request of only seven members of the House Committee on Government Reform. That interpretation raises two substantial questions that require rejection of plaintiffs' statutory interpretation.

First, plaintiffs' interpretation admits of not a single exception to disclosure, instead purporting to vest a sweeping authority in any seven members of the Committee to demand disclosure of executive information. Thus, an agency in possession of material deemed sensitive for national security or other reasons, or which is otherwise protected by Executive privilege, would have no choice, in plaintiffs' view, but to make the requested disclosure. This rather remarkable power, which on plaintiffs' view was apparently randomly vested only in members of these particular committees, is one not enjoyed even by the full Congress. See Barenblatt, 360 U.S. at 111 ("Broad as it is, the power [to investigate] is not, however, without limitations."). See also McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 177 (1927) (congressional investigations must pertain to subjects "on which legislation could be had").

Not only does the legislative history suggest a far narrower statutory scope, but there is not a shred of evidence that any member even considered the ramifications of a sweeping grant of access to executive information. This silence is particularly disturbing in light of the separation of powers issues such an interpretation raises. Granting unlimited access to agency files may cause unwarranted interference with the Executive function to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." U.S. Const., art. II, § 3. See Yeager Decl. Ex. K, at 29 (then Assistant Attorney General Scalia noting the "questionable constitutionality" of Section 2954 should it be interpreted to provide unfettered access to executive materials). Indeed, save for the jurisdiction of the committee itself, plaintiffs would place no limits whatever on the committee's right of access. The Constitution requires that Congress, and its committees and members, respect and defer to a sphere of Executive autonomy. See Barenblatt, 360 U.S. at 112 (Congress "cannot inquire into matters which are within the exclusive province of one of the other branches of the Government"; it cannot "supplant the Executive in what exclusively belongs to the Executive").[7] An unfettered right of access by members of Congress to Executive materials would, as noted, be unprecedented, and would denigrate the constitutional doctrine of executive privilege. See Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 733 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc) (holding that House Judiciary Committee's need for information was "too attenuated and too tangential to its functions" to permit judicial enforcement of subpoena directed at President).

Second, plaintiffs' interpretation is all the more unusual, and constitutionally suspect, because this absolute power is proposed to be lodged not in any committee, or subcommittee, but [7] Moreover, granting an unfettered right of access to agency information will result in the very vices Executive privilege is designed to cure – it will inhibit frank discussion, prematurely foreclose useful lines of inquiry by agency officials, and generally negatively affect the quality of agency decisions. See NLRB v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 421 U.S. 149, 151 (1975) ("Manifestly, the ultimate purpose of this long-recognized privilege is to prevent injury to the quality of agency decisions."). The Secretary has consistently taken the position in suits brought under the Freedom of Information Act that adjusted census information is protected by the deliberative process privilege. See Florida House of Representatives v. United States Department of Commerce, 961 F.2d 941 (11th Cir.), cert. dismissed, 506 U.S. 969 (1992) (holding that adjusted census figures are protected from disclosure under the FOIA). But see Assembly of the State of California v. United States Department of Commerce, 968 F.2d 916 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding that factual record did not support privilege claim for census figures).

in a mere fraction of the membership of only two of Congress' more than 40 full committees. Article I of the Constitution vests the lawmaking power and, by implication, the investigatory power, in "Congress." Plaintiffs do not even hint at what authority Congress presumably relied upon in writing a blank investigatory check to any seven members of the House Committee on Government Reform. Odder still, they do not explain why Congress would vest such powers in a small number of minority members of the committee. Moreover, plaintiffs' interpretation has no logical constitutional limitations. In plaintiffs' view, Congress presumably could vest in even a single member of a committee a breadth of investigatory powers not enjoyed by the full Congress. The Court should not simply assume that Congress intended to so empower a small fraction of the House Committee on Government Reform when it enacted Section 2954. There is no evidence that Congress considered, much less expressly intended, such a constitutionally doubtful, and politically bizarre, result.

This Court should not adopt plaintiffs' interpretation, particularly absent some demonstration that Congress intended to vest blanket access to Executive materials in any seven members of the House Committee on Government Reform and, indeed, in the face of plain evidence that it did not so intend. The Court should reject plaintiffs' constitutionally doubtful interpretation, accept the Secretary's interpretation, and grant summary judgment in favor of the Secretary.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should exercise its remedial discretion and dismiss plaintiffs' Complaint. In the alternative, the Court should grant summary judgment in favor of the Secretary.

HENRY A. WAXMAN, et al., Plaintiffs, v. DONALD L. EVANS, Secretary of Commerce, Defendant.	No. 01-04530-LGB (AJWx) SECRETARY'S REPLY TO PLAINTIFFS' OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO DISMISS OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, CROSS-MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT Date: November 26, 2001 Time: 10:00 a.m. Courtroom: No. 780 Location: Los Angeles-Roybal

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs' Opposition to the Secretary's Motion to Dismiss Or, in the Alternative, Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment ("Pl. Opp.") is noticeably long on rhetoric and accusation, but short on persuasive argument. Plaintiffs' report of the demise of the doctrine of remedial discretion is decidedly premature. Indeed, far from "dismantling" the doctrine shortly after adopting it, the D.C. Circuit has hewed to the doctrine of remedial discretion for nearly twenty years as a means of avoiding just the sort of political branch confrontation Plaintiffs seek to foist on this Court. The doctrine remains a viable, and in this case wholly appropriate, means for the Court to sidestep an inter- and intra-branch political dispute concerning access to information.

Even if the Court should decide to wade into the parties' political dispute and declare a victor, it should not do so by ignoring, as Plaintiffs continue to do, the plain intent of Congress in enacting Section 2954. "Plain meaning" is not the talismanic rule Plaintiffs claim it to be. For good and sound reasons, courts seek to render common sense interpretations of statutes. They do so, of course, by discerning Congress' purpose in enacting the statute at issue. It does not require an "interpretive voyage," Pl. Opp. at 10, or any other judicial stretch, to discern Congress' plain intent with respect to Section 2954. The brief legislative history accompanying Section 2954, which the Secretary has provided to the Court in full, supports the Secretary's interpretation that Congress' intent was to ensure that committee members who might be interested in information formerly contained in what came to be seen as useless reports would continue to have access to that information after the reporting requirements were repealed. Particularly where, as here, the issue is one of first impression, there is ample authority, in the Ninth Circuit and elsewhere, to permit the Court to consider Congress' plain, and readily discernible, intent. Given Congress' plainly discernible purpose, and the inherent constitutional difficulties engendered by Plaintiffs' expansive interpretation of Section 2954's scope, the Court should enter judgment in favor of the Secretary.

ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT SHOULD EXERCISE ITS REMEDIAL DISCRETION

REV_00139261

Plaintiffs misread the scope of the remedial discretion doctrine. The doctrine is not aimed solely at avoiding constitutional crises, or narrowly concerned with "thorny constitutional issues," Pl. Opp. at 4, although given the nature of the parties to these disputes it should come as no surprise that such weighty issues do arise. The essence of the doctrine of remedial discretion, which was first articulated in Riegle v. Federal Open Market Committee, 656 F.2d 873 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1082 (1981), is that courts should encourage political compromise rather than intercede in inter- and intra-branch disputes. The doctrine is intended to ensure that "the court not interfere in matters which properly could, and should, be decided by appeal to one's fellow legislators." Gregg v. Barrett, 771 F.2d 539, 545 (D.C. Cir. 1985). It is intended to shield the courts from political skirmishes where "individual members of Congress seek to vent their frustration with their colleagues, or with the executive branch, or both, by appeals to the courts." Id. at 543.[1]

That, of course, is the precise concern raised by the instant lawsuit. Sixteen members of the House Committee on Government Reform appeal to this Court to adjudicate the nature of their right to information held by an Executive agency. The Secretary has argued, and Plaintiffs do not dispute, that these minority committee members have at their disposal remedies that would not entail judicial meddling in their dispute. For example, Plaintiffs could seek to convince their majority colleagues to join them in subpoenaing the information sought.[2] They

[1] Contrary to Plaintiffs' argument, invocation of the remedial discretion doctrine does not depend upon the merits of any claim of privilege the Secretary may make with respect to the information at issue. Indeed, that is the whole point of the doctrine – for courts to avoid resolving such claims. Thus, Plaintiffs improperly seek to interject the Ninth Circuit's decision in Assembly of the State of California v. United States Dep't of Commerce, 968 F.2d 916 (9th Cir. 1992) into this case. In any event, it suffices to state that the Secretary disagrees with Plaintiffs' interpretation of Assembly. In fact, the scope and effect of that decision, which is not at issue here, is currently being litigated in another forum. Carter et al. v. Dep't of Commerce, No. 01-
868-RE (D. Ore.).

[2] As Plaintiffs themselves note, one or more of them could also have sought the requested information under the Freedom of Information Act. Pl. Opp. at 5. They chose not to do so, even though they claim Ninth Circuit precedent mandates disclosure under FOIA, on the purported grounds that FOIA procedures are "burdensome and delay access." Id. at 5. If there is have chosen instead to "vent their frustration" with the Secretary in this judicial forum, asking the Court to declare a victor under Section 2954. The purpose of the doctrine of remedial discretion is to avoid just such a tilting of the scales in favor of one branch. The doctrine enforces the notion, rooted in the separation of powers, that the legislative and executive branches are best situated to achieve a compromise solution. United States v. AT&T Co., 551 F.2d 384, 394 (D.C. Cir. 1976), appeal after remand, 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977). Under the doctrine of equitable discretion, the Court should stay its hand and insist that these Plaintiffs invoke the alternative, collegial remedies available to them.

Plaintiffs also mischaracterize the vitality of the remedial discretion doctrine. The doctrine has not been "abandoned," "discarded," or "interred," Pl. Opp. at 1, 4, and the Secretary is not asking that the Court "resurrect" the doctrine of remedial discretion. Id. at 2. Plaintiffs seek to bury the doctrine alive through a highly selective rendering of its history and pedigree. It is nothing more than Plaintiffs' own "wishful thinking," Pl. Opp. at 6, that the D.C. Circuit began to "dismantle the equitable discretion doctrine almost at the same time it was being created." Id. at 3. In fact, as the D.C. Circuit itself pointed out in Gregg, supra, the court "openly embraced" the doctrine in Riegle, and then proceeded to "firmly establish[]" the doctrine by upholding the dismissal of numerous claims brought by members of Congress in a long line of cases. Gregg, 771 F.2d at 544. See Vander Jagt v. O'Neill, 699 F.2d 1166, 1176 (D. C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 823 (1983); Crockett v. Reagan, 720 F.2d 1355, 1357 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (per curiam); Moore v. U.S. House of Representatives, 733 F.2d 946 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1106 (1985); Gregg, 771 F.2d at 545-46; Melcher v. Federal Open Market Committee, 836 F. 2d 561 (D.C. Cir. 1987).

a "strawman" in this lawsuit, Pl. Opp. at 11, it is Plaintiffs' argument that the mere existence of FOIA demonstrates that there are no separation of powers concerns in asking the Court to adjudicate the scope of Section 2954. The fact that these Plaintiffs did not, acting as "ordinary citizens," Pl. Opp. at 5, invoke FOIA proves nothing with regard to the applicability of the remedial discretion doctrine in this case. As a matter of constitutional separation of powers, the difference between a request made by an individual Member under a public information statute available to all citizens, and one made by a group of legislators pursuant to a statute that purportedly provides a sweeping right to Executive information to minority Members by virtue of their membership on a specific House committee, should be obvious.

REV_00139263

To be sure, as Plaintiffs note, then-Judge Scalia expressed his own concerns about the doctrine in his concurrence in Moore, and other judges from time to time have cautioned against over-extending the doctrine. See Gregg, 771 F.2d at 545. It is, however, an unwarranted, and unsupportable, leap from criticisms that the doctrine is imperfect to Plaintiffs' conclusion that the doctrine has been "discarded" by the court. Pl. Opp. at 2. None of the cases cited above has been overruled. Nor, despite their efforts, can Plaintiffs rewrite the D.C. Circuit's opinion in Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112 (D.C. Cir. 1999), to accomplish this purpose. Chenoweth was concerned principally with whether, after the Supreme Court's decision in Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811 (1997), the D.C. Circuit's prior legislative standing doctrine remained good law. Although holding that its standing doctrine in this area was "untenable" in light of Raines, 181 F.3d at 115, and that the legislators' claims must therefore be dismissed, the court expressly left open what effect, if any, Raines had on the doctrine of remedial discretion. See id. at 116 ("Whatever Moore gives the Representatives under the rubric of standing, it takes away as a matter of equitable discretion.").[3] The doctrine remains viable, and the Court should apply it in this case.

II. CONGRESS' PLAIN PURPOSE CANNOT BE IGNORED

There should be no confusion concerning Congress' intent in enacting Section 2954. As the legislative history demonstrates, prior to 1928, numerous agencies had been required to submit to Congress reports and statements that members had come to view as being of little or no value. The legislative history demonstrates that it was principally the form, or "character," of the reports and statements themselves that troubled Congress and caused it in 1928 to decide that henceforth128 reports and other statements would not be submitted. See, e.g., S. Rep. No. 1320, [3] Plaintiffs again overstate their case in arguing that Chenoweth holds that in all subsequent cases, standing is the "key inquiry" and displaces the separation of powers concerns that gave rise to a separate doctrine of remedial discretion. The D.C. Circuit itself noted that Raines did not address either the applicability or validity of the remedial discretion doctrine. See 181 F.3d at 115. The Chenoweth panel speculated, in what is plainly dicta, that Raines "may not overrule Moore so much as require us to merge our separation of powers and standing analyses." Id. at 116. Such ruminations hardly sound the death knell for the doctrine of remedial discretion.

at 4 ("Little attention is given to the character of report that should be submitted, and the legislation goes in the statute books. The department makes the character of report that it thinks will fit the legal requirement, and often it is entirely valueless for the purpose intended.") (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6). See also H. Rep. No. 1757, at 6 (same) (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 12). In many instances, the information required to be submitted in the reports was available elsewhere, thus rendering the submission of the mandated report, in Congress' judgment, a useless exercise. See S. Rep. No. 1320, at 2-3; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, at 3-5 (Zick Decl. Ex. A, at 4-5, 9-11). The history further indicates that, based on this experience, both the House and Senate urged members in the future generally to be more circumspect in requesting reports from agencies, and to seek to narrow and refine their requests for information such that reports would be of some use to the recipient committees. See S. Rep. No. 1320, at 4; H.R. Rep. No. 1757, at 6 (Zick Decl. Ex. A, at 6, 12).

Although Congress decided, for the reasons stated, to repeal a number of mandatory reporting requirements, it did not wish to deny members access to whatever useful information might have been contained in the reports, or even to the reports themselves, should members later find them to be of value. The plain statements of legislative purpose relating to Section 2954, which Plaintiffs continue to ignore, thus bear repeating once more. The House Report accompanying Section 2954 states:

H. Rep. No. 1757, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 6 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 12) (emphasis added).[4]

[4] Thus, the House Report speaks in terms of preserving the "information contained in the reports." This may well explain why Congress chose to place Section 2954 in the subchapter entitled "Reports," but to label the specific section "Information to committees of Congress on request."

REV_00139265

Similarly, the Senate Report states:

> This section makes it possible to require any report discontinued by the language of this bill to be resubmitted to either House upon its necessity becoming evident to the membership of either body.

S. Rep. No. 1320, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4 (Zick Decl., Ex. A, at 6)(emphasis added). What is astonishing is that, in the face of these plain statements, Plaintiffs continue to insist that "[t]here is simply nothing in the Reports or the statute itself to suggest that the drafters intended to limit the information the Committee and its members could request to information formerly contained in the discontinued reports." Pl. Opp. at 8 (emphasis added).[5] That is precisely what the Reports say.[6]

Plaintiffs treat the notion that "plain meaning" can be trumped by clear, but contrary, legislative intent as a contrived canon of statutory construction. To the contrary, there is ample support in case law from this circuit for the rule of construction that purportedly plain or literal meaning does not control where there exists a "clearly expressed legislative intent" that is contrary to the text of the statute under consideration. Central Mont. Elec. Power Coop. v. Administrator of Bonneville Power Admin., 840 F.2d 1472, 1477 (9th Cir. 1988). See also In re Catapult Entertainment, Inc., 165 F.3d 747, 753 (9th Cir.) (court will depart from plain language "only where the legislative history clearly indicates that Congress meant something other than it said"), cert. dismissed, 528 U.S. 924 (1999); Foxgord v. Hischemoeller, 820 F.2d 1030, 1034 (9th Cir.) ("This court may give effect to a clearly expressed legislative intent which is contrary to the language of the statute itself."), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 986 (1987).

[5] It is Plaintiffs, not the Secretary, who engage in a "highly selective discussion of the legislative history." Pl. Opp. at 8. The House and Senate Reports could not more plainly state that the right conferred in § 2954 was a narrow one. See Secretary's Opposition to Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment, at 15-17.

[6] There is nothing unusual about Congress limiting Section 2954's reach regarding the discontinued reports and the information therein to the Committee's jurisdiction. See Pl. Opp. at 8-9. Indeed, it is hard to imagine what authority the affected committees would have to compel information and reports outside their jurisdiction.

The legislative history, which Plaintiffs did not provide to the Court despite its brevity, and which they repeatedly ignore or mischaracterize, meets the Ninth Circuit's standard. It is not the Secretary's "theory," Pl. Opp. at 7, that Section 2954 confers a narrow right of access to information formerly contained in reports Congress found to be useless and unnecessary; that is a matter of historical fact, as indicated in the statements quoted above and in the other legislative materials.[7] It is that plain history that distinguishes this case from In re Catapult Entertainment, supra, and other cases in which courts, although recognizing that they should not turn a blind eye to legislative intent, refused to depart from the text because the legislative history did not persuasively demonstrate that Congress' purpose was at odds with the text. Here, there is ample evidence that Congress' purpose is at variance with what Plaintiffs argue is the "plain language" of § 2954.

Plaintiffs again overreach in arguing that the Secretary wishes simply to ignore the statutory text of Section 2954.[8] Plaintiffs ask the Court to ignore the reality that legislative will sometimes is imperfectly, or even incorrectly, represented in statutory text. Fortunately, the canon of plain meaning is not a judicial straightjacket. It is well settled that "'the meaning of statutory language, plain or not, depends on context.'" Holloway v. United States, 526 U.S. 1, 7 (1999) (quoting Brown v. Gardner, 513 U.S. 115, 118 (1994)) (quoting King v. St. Vincent's Hospital, 502 U.S. 215, 221 (1991)). See also Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 266 (1981) ("The circumstances of the enactment of particular legislation may persuade a court that Congress did not intend words of common meaning to have their literal effect."). The canon does not present any obstacle to this Court taking the legislative materials into consideration when determining the breadth of "information" Congress intended to affect in Section 2954. See United States v. American Trucking Ass'ns., Inc., 310 U.S. 534, 543-44 (1940) ("When aid to construction of the meaning of words, as used in the statute, is available, there certainly can be no 'rule of law' which forbids its use, however clear the words may appear on 'superficial examination.'") (citations omitted). Section 2954's context, circumstances, and overall history compel the conclusion that Plaintiffs' broad interpretation of Section 2954 must be rejected by the Court.

[7] Based in part on this history, the Department of Justice and the Congressional Research Service have consistently adhered to the same narrow interpretation of § 2954.

[8] Contrary to Plaintiffs' assertion, Pl. Opp. at 6, the Secretary quoted the language of Section 2954 at page 4 of his opening brief.

III. CONSTITUTIONAL DOUBTS RESULT FROM PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 2954

Plaintiffs chastise the Secretary for raising the serious constitutional doubts that accompany their expansive interpretation of Section 2954. This is no "strawman," as Plaintiffs suggest. Pl. Opp. at 11. In determining the validity of a party's proposed statutory interpretation, courts must, of course, concern themselves with the consequences of the interpretations pressed upon them.

Plaintiffs cannot avoid the sheer oddness of their proposed interpretation, which would vest sweeping authority in a small number of minority members of the House Committee on Government Reform. Of course, as Plaintiffs note, Congress vests a number of powers in less than the full membership of its many committees. But it does not vest any power of the magnitude encouraged by Plaintiffs under Section 2954 in a small number of minority members of a committee. If the majority in Congress had intended that result in 1928, one would expect to find some mention of it in the legislative materials.

The matter of Section 2954's interpretation is one of constitutional proportion because Plaintiffs ask this Court to rule as a matter of law that these minority members have blanket access to any Executive information within the jurisdiction of the committee. In their opening brief, Plaintiffs nowhere hinted that Section 2954 had any limits other than the committee's jurisdictional bounds. Now they argue that, of course, a "valid" claim of Executive privilege is an exception to Section 2954's mandate. Pl. Opp. at 11. In other words, rather than accept an interpretation consistent with Congress' narrow purposes, Plaintiffs press an interpretation that vaults the judiciary into future contests over the validity of constitutional privilege claims. Plaintiffs seek to avoid this result by arguing that no Presidential materials are even implicated by their proposed interpretation, since Section 2954 applies only to "Executive agencies." But, of course, those materials, and other sensitive information, may well be found within the files of the "Executive agency" called upon to produce information upon request of the committee.

Nowhere do Plaintiffs provide any reason, other than their own interest in expediency, for this Court, or any other, to risk interference with Executive functions and prerogatives by reaching out to interpret Section 2954 in the manner proposed. Indeed, Plaintiffs themselves offer the best reason not to embark on this course: "Members of the majority have no need for provisions like § 2954, because they can always resort, if need be, to the subpoena process to gather information." Pl. Opp. at 13. Plaintiffs should be required to resort to this or other remedies here.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should exercise grant the Secretary's Motion to Dismiss or, in the Alternative, Cross-Motion for Summary Judgment, and deny Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment.

Respectfully submitted, by the way, we're meeting at 1:45 today just to keep everyone focused and to keep our spade work progressing.

also, my understanding is that we have 3 letters responding to burton pending WH Cnsl. approval. any reason we can't send 2 and 3 this week? i realize 1. is a bit trickier but at some point soon, before the 6th, we may want to send it up.

Here are the 3 drafts we've discussed and circulated:
1. On the privilege log;
2. On relevant precedents;
3. A summary of our document production to date.

Draft January 17, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to respond to requests articulated at the Committee's hearing on December 13, 2001 for a log of the documents relating to the Boston FBI matter that were subject to the President's claim of executive privilege.

Enclosed for your review is a log of those documents. I was going to provide this log to you at the meeting that was scheduled for January 10, 2002. Our expectation was that we would describe the documents to Committee staff and hear the staff's explanation of how the Committee's investigative needs relate to particular documents, which would allow the Committee and the Department to explore together the possibilities for further accommodating the Committee's needs. We especially wanted to advise you about one document relevant to the Salvati matter, which you have identified as a focus of the Committee's interest. Consequently, we were very disappointed that you canceled the meeting and we hope that we can reschedule it in the near future.

Sincerely,

Michael Chertoff
Assistant Attorney General

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to your letter, dated September 7, 2001, and referenced in your letter, dated January 17, 2002, regarding the Committee hearing scheduled for January 23, 2002, which has been postponed. I apologize for the delay in responding to your September letter.

The Department does not maintain records of the precedents that you requested in any readily retrievable form. Hence, we are not in a position to provide comprehensive information about requests for deliberative prosecutorial documents prior to 1992. We appreciate your interest in information about how such requests were handled prior to the Clinton Administration, however, and we have compiled the enclosed records, which we hope will be helpful to you. They include a 1986 Opinion of the Office of Legal Counsel (OLC), a 1989 Memorandum of OLC Assistant Attorney General William Barr, a 1991 letter from Assistant Attorney General Lee Rawls to Senator Metzenbaum, and a January 27, 2000 letter from Assistant Attorney General Robert Raben to Chairman John Linder of the House Rules Subcommittee on Rules and Organization of the House. These documents have informed the Department's responses to requests for deliberative prosecutorial documents and our approach to the accommodation process. It remains our hope that you will agree to engage in such a process with regard to the Boston FBI documents. We would appreciate receiving from you information about the precedents that you believe are relevant to your request for these documents.

I look forward to hearing from you further about these issues. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional assistance about this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

Draft January 18, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is to confirm and further the conversation between the Committee's Chief Counsel Jim Wilson and FBI Special Counsel Beth Beers on January 9, 2002 regarding the status of our responses to your requests for documents relating to the oversight of the Bureau's handling of informants in Boston.

As a preliminary matter, Mr. Wilson confirmed that the Department has complied with the Committee's document requests dated March 30, May 10, and May 23, 2001. With regard to items requested in your letter dated June 5, 2001, our production of documents responsive to items 1 (Messrs. Rico, Condon, Connolly and Morris awards and similar documents) and 7 (records about DOJ involvement in State prosecution of Joseph Barboza) are complete.

We have not processed records responsive to item 2 because they relate to matters under investigation by the Justice Task Force. In addition, we have not produced material responsive to items 5 (FBI/OPR report on FBI's relationship with James Bulger, Stephen Flemmi and other Boston informants) or 9(b) (Stephen Flemmi, 1960-1971) because we believe that they are covered by the Protective Order entered by Judge Wolf in United States v. Francis P. Salemme, et al. (D. Mass. 1997). The FBI/OPR report also contains information relating to pending law enforcement matters.

We have produced some records responsive to item 3 (Patriarca wiretaps and overhears, January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1968) and item 12 (Top Hoodlum Program). We have completed our production of FBI records responsive to these items and appreciated Mr. Wilson's clarification that, regarding item 12, you are not seeking AG Informant Guidelines. We also have completed our production of FBI records responsive to item 4 (Gennaro Angiulo wiretaps and overhears, January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1968) and item 6 (Mr. Rico's recall from retirement and subsequent involvement in investigation of former U.S. District Judge Alcee Hastings). We have not identified any documents responsive to item 8 (post-retirement contacts with Messrs. Rico, Condon, and Connolly) beyond those identified in response to items 1 and 6. We have not searched files pertaining to pending civil actions in which these individuals may be named as defendants.

We have also produced records responsive to item 9(c) (Joseph Barboza) and are continuing to review and process responsive records. As we advised Mr. Wilson, our search for and release of records responsive to items 10 and 11, regarding Mr. Barboza's contacts with listed individuals and contacts between listed individuals concerning Mr. Barboza, was conducted in conjunction with our processing of records responsive to item 9(c). Efforts to locate records responsive to 9(a) (Vincent Flemmi) have recently identified potentially responsive records maintained by the FBI's Boston office. Those records are being reviewed and responsive material will be processed and released. Mr. Wilson advised that he would provide additional information regarding item 9(d) (John S. Kelley) to assist the FBI in searching for records.

Please be advised, in responding to your request, we have not disclosed information which would reveal the identity of an FBI informant. In some cases, this has required redaction of material contained in documents that have been released and in other instances we have withheld entire informant files. The FBI advises that more specific information concerning the material being withheld cannot be provided without jeopardizing the very information we are trying to protect. This issue was discussed with Mr. Wilson during his review of material responsive to item 13 (redacted text) during two visits during August 2001. We are continuing to consider alternatives for accommodating the Committee's needs regarding this matter.

With regard to your letter dated December 18, 2001, I am advised that the FBI believes, based on a preliminary search for responsive material, that disclosure of documents responsive to items 1 and 2, regarding contacts between Frank Oreto and Joseph Salvati and Marie Salvati, respectively, if they exist, would be prohibited by Title III. We are conferring with Department attorneys about that question and will supplement this response as soon as possible. Mr. Wilson instructed that the Committee does not currently wish to receive documents responsive to items 3 (SA Rico's handling of John "Red" Kelley); 4 (SA Sheehan's handling of John "Red" Kelley); 5 (Strike Force Chief Edward Harrington's handling of John "Red" Kelley); 6 (re Rhode Island Supreme Court finding on subornation of perjury by SA Rico during 1970 trial of Maurice Lerner); and 7 (re Rhode Island Supreme Court finding of perjury by SA Rico during 1970 trial of Maurice Lerner). Lastly, the FBI advised that they have identified material concerning item 8 (Victor Garo), but it is not investigative in nature. Mr. Wilson said he is not interested in those records.

The Department is continuing to search for documents responsive to your requests and we will supplement this response when additional documents become available. I hope that this information is helpful. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you would like additional assistance regarding this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

DRAFT

January __, 2002

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
U.S. House of Representatives
2204 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-0529

Dear Congressman Waxman:

This letter responds to your letter of January 15, 2002. As I have previously stated, I had a brief conversation with Kenneth Lay on October 11. Our conversation addressed the prospects for an economic stimulus bill along the lines the President had articulated. Beyond that, as you know, numerous committees of the House and Senate and many executive branch departments and agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Justice, are currently conducting official investigations into the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy. To the extent any duly authorized investigative bodies may request additional relevant information, I will respond in a timely, orderly, and appropriate way.

Please be assured that the President and I share your concern about the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy, including the consequences for Enron employees and shareholders. The President has assured the American people that he will seek appropriate policy changes that might help to prevent similar occurrences in the future. Indeed, two cabinet-level working groups are now examining the pension regulation and financial disclosure issues presented by Enron's situation. In short, the Administration's resources are fully devoted to appropriate investigative, law enforcement, and policy actions relating to the Enron bankruptcy.

Sincerely,

Mitchell E. Daniels, Jr.
Director

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
U.S. House of Representatives
2204 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-0529

Dear Congressman Waxman:

This letter responds to your letter of January 14, 2002. As I have noted on previous occasions, I had no communications with Kenneth Lay or other Enron executives last fall relating to their company's financial situation. Following media reports of Enron's deteriorating condition, I did, however, lead an effort to monitor the energy and financial markets in an effort to assess the potential systemic impacts, if any, of Enron's failure. That effort obviously and necessarily involved some interaction between members of the President's economic team and others in the Administration who were working on similar issues.

I have already furnished the limited information in my possession that is necessary to understand my role in responding to Enron's financial collapse. To the extent that any of the duly authorized investigations that are currently ongoing in either the executive branch or the Congress may request further information from me, I will of course make a timely and appropriate response. In the meantime, I will continue to devote my energies to helping President Bush develop and pursue policies that will help our economy enjoy a rapid, steady, and robust recovery. I welcome your continuing interest and assistance in that important enterprise.

Sincerely,

Lawrence B. Lindsey

DRAFT

January __, 2002

The Honorable Henry A. Waxman
U.S. House of Representatives
2204 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20515-0529

Dear Congressman Waxman:

This letter responds to your letter of January 14, 2002. As Secretary Evans has previously reported, he spoke to me and advised me that he received communications from Enron and also spoke from time to time with my Deputy, Josh Bolten. Beyond that, as you know, numerous committees of the House and Senate and many executive branch departments and agencies, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Justice, are currently conducting official investigations into the causes and consequences of the Enron bankruptcy. To the extent any duly authorized investigative bodies may request additional relevant information, we will respond in a timely, orderly, and appropriate way.

The President shares your concern over the Enron bankruptcy, and he is committed to ensuring that its causes and consequences are fully explored and understood. The President is determined to ensure that the law is fully enforced against any person or entity who may have broken it in connection with Enron's failure and to support policy changes that might help to prevent similar occurrences in the future. To that end, he has convened two cabinet-level working groups to examine the pension regulation and financial disclosure issues presented by Enron's situation. All Americans have a right to expect that their government will respond to this problem in a cooperative, responsible, and bipartisan way, and I hope and believe that we will continue to do so.

Sincerely,

Andrew H. Card, Jr.

An Empire Built on Ifs
Enron deserves a big Texas whippin'.

How rich do you have to be?

I know a man who once ran a big international company, who had done very well in life and was happily retired. Years after he left the company, it went public in an IPO that would make all the company's officers even richer than they were, which was already pretty rich. The company's retired executives got together and decided to press for a piece of the pie. They had to fight for it, and it got messy, but in the end they all got some more money.

I asked my friend, during the controversy, why the retired members were fighting so hard. Had some fallen on hard times? No, he said, not to his knowledge. Did they need the money for immediate and pressing concerns? No, he said, not that he knew of. "Then why is this such a big deal to them if they're already rich?" He looked at me with the kind of face people get when they hear something truly inexplicable. And then he said in a pleasant, explanatory tone, "Everyone wants more."

It was my turn to get the inexplicable look. Because not everyone wants more, or at least not everyone wants more in circumstances like that. The idea of getting into a struggle to squeeze out another $5 million when you already have a $100 million seemed to me absurd, a misallocation of energy and interest. It's not as if you can buy a better steak if you're already that rich. It's not as if you can buy a better anything. So why fight for another five?

I have thought of this conversation ever since the Enron scandal began. Enron's officers, its leaders and top dogs, were really rich. They created a big company out of nothing and did very well. But then when things went bad--when their own decisions, apparently, drove the enterprise south--they made sure they would stay rich. They did this by quietly selling off their stock while the peons below them were not allowed to. While the peons below watched the worth of their stock erode, and then fall, and then plummet. The big guys had to stay rich. Everyone wants more.

It is, to me, an amazing, an almost unbelievable story. And I bring a particular and personal knowledge to it.

You have heard the past few weeks of journalists, political figures and others who were advisers to Enron or served on its board. I was not an adviser or board member, but in 1997 I spent two days in their Houston headquarters touring the place and meeting with their top officers to get to know the company so I could work on a speech with the CEO, Ken Lay, and work with his people on the CEO's letter in an upcoming annual report. They wanted the report to be interesting to read, like Jack Welch's famous letter to shareholders at the beginning of General Electric annual reports. I'd never done work like that before and wound up never doing it again, in part because I wasn't good at it, and in part because I realized I just didn't get modern big business.

The people I dealt with at Enron were mostly middle-level workers, and they were terrific--smart, dedicated and loyal to their company. They worked like dogs. They're probably among those who just lost much of their money. One of the things they believed in as good public policy was deregulating the sale of consumer electricity in America. I supported it too but had reservations about it. I understood the basic arguments: that deregulation held the promise of lower energy costs for consumers, cleaner and more efficient energy, profit for private sector investors in those companies that would compete to provide energy, such as Enron, and, ultimately, a spur to more inventions that would make consumers' lives better.
Deregulation was part of the reason Enron asked me to come down and talk to them. For I had told an Enron worker I'd met in Manhattan that making the case for the deregulation of anything these days, especially a commodity that has been a public utility since before almost everyone in the country was born, would be difficult.

When I went down to Houston, I met with Enron's No. 2, Jeff Skilling, and told him I felt Enron would have a big problem in persuading the American people to support deregulation. The reason? Two words: Too complicated.

He told me that deregulation of electricity is certainly not complicated.

Well, I said, maybe you're right, but this is how I see it. American consumers have a myriad of choices on almost everything now, which is wonderful in the abstract but often hellish in the particular. For instance, telephones. When I was a kid you got a phone from the phone company. There was only one phone company, so you didn't have to do research. They came and put in the jack and you called your friends. You didn't even choose the color of the phone when I was a kid; all the phones were black. Everyone had the same kind of phone and the same service. It was easy.

Now there are 50 phone companies, 50 kinds of phones, 50 kinds of service, 50 package deals, five different phone bills every month, phone companies calling at dinnertime to sell their wares, secret codes to get our messages. And it sometimes makes you feel like you wish there could be one big phone company again, and one black phone.

I told him that it is fabulous that we have such choice, such progress, but that it's burdensome too. I sometimes miss the simplicity of the old, limited world. And I thought if I did, some others did too. Asking people to make individual decisions about what local electric company to use just might be one item too many on the average consumer's Daily Decision List.

Mr. Skilling got a sort of dark look as I spoke. And finally he said, impatiently, that phone deregulation has made telephones not more expensive but less. "Do you know what it costs to call London now compared to the way it was?"

I said I didn't, and thought: Most people even today, in 1997, aren't calling London all the time. That's not how normal people judge progress. And anyway it's not the point. Life has gotten too complicated for a lot of people, that's the point.

Let me tell you what I saw when I was there. I saw cavernous rooms with big monitors on the walls, and on desks too. The monitors and computers were blinking out numbers. I remember the numbers and words on the screens as bright green. Young future Masters of the Universe were standing with phones, monitoring the numbers, saying things, buying and selling. I met with a woman famous in the company for being in charge of putting big natural gas pipelines into Central or South America and India. She seemed intense and intelligent and, like the men, very Armani but kind of Texas Armani--everyone well tailored but with more gold, more colors than Wall Street people, who are sort of more gray-hued.
I thought Ken Lay intelligent, soft-spoken, somewhat opaque. At one point I met Mr. Lay's wife. It was just after I returned from Houston, and I met with him in an Enron suite at a hotel in New York. Mrs. Lay was visiting New York and had just come in from a long day of shopping. I was introduced to her and what I remember was she was wearing beautiful soft tailored black leather slacks. They were like movie-star pants. And I thought: Boy, these people have a lot of money.

And I thought, they spend a lot of money. That was one thing that hit me hard in Houston: They were "hemorrhaging money!" as Tom Wolfe's Sherman McCoy said. They were building this and tearing down that, they were, they told me, talking to legislators in various state houses, lobbying to get deregulation bills passed. All of it seemed expensive, labor-intensive, time-intensive.

And it all seemed so tentative, so provisional. The Enron building was huge; the Enron sign outside, the big tilted E, was huge; the gold earrings on the women executives were huge; the watches on the men were huge; the paychecks were huge; the company's ambitions were huge. But all of it seemed to depend on things that were provisional. If they are able to build the big pipeline in India, it will be great and profitable--provided it happens. If they are able to get states to deregulate electricity, and Enron is able to provide it, and it all goes well, it will be great and profitable--if it happens. If the Central or South American pipeline goes through and works and runs a profit it will be great--if it happens. An empire built on ifs. It all seemed so provisional.

I went away for a few weeks and worked hard and tried to put together a speech and make a contribution to the annual report, but none of it really worked. Mr. Lay used at least part of the speech I worked on, about deregulation and its challenges. Some of what I tried to write for the annual report made it in. But mostly my contributions weren't helpful, and I think for two reasons. One was that the guys at the top, and in the middle, seemed unable to communicate to me exactly what it was the company was doing to make money. So I didn't absorb the information and make it understandable to others. The other was that I think I sensed a sort of corporate monomania at the top--if you can't understand what we're doing then maybe you're not too bright.

But the key part was that I couldn't help them explain their mission because I didn't fully understand what their mission was. I understand what the Kenneth Cole shoe company does. It makes shoes and sells them in stores. Firestone makes tires. I couldn't figure out how Enron was making its money, what exactly it was selling, and every time I asked I got a kind of gobbledygook answer or a cryptic one, like "The future!"

We should all have a realistic sense of our limits, and I decided that one of mine is that I don't have a mind that appears to be able to understand the complexities of modern big business. But my dimness was in this case helpful to me. It meant I would have not a long relationship with Enron but a short one that lasted about a month. And it allowed me to make another choice. A friend, on being told I'd been to Houston and was working on an annual report, told me: "Get paid in stock, that company is golden."

But it didn't seem golden to me, it only seemed confusing. So I sent them a bill, charging, if memory serves, $250 an hour for the 100 to 200 hours I worked, which is more than a first-rate psychiatrist and less than a first-rate lawyer. This is what I used to charge for speeches in those days when I did them.

I never worked for Enron again. I stayed in touch with a few of the midlevel people for a while, but they all left in time. I'd think of them now and then, wonder how the company was doing, read or hear that it was No. 1, top in the field, golden. Until it wasn't anymore.

I'm speaking of all of this because I feel I have to in order to write about Enron. And I have to write about Enron because I have strong views about the scandal.
I am a conservative, and so a Republican. I believe that conservatives and Republicans have a special responsibility, as the party that stands for free markets, to see to it that free markets work, and are not abused, gamed or finagled. Republicans and conservatives have, I believe, a special responsibility to come down hard on people who cheat their shareholders and their employees.

Obviously the primary question at the moment is whether anyone from Ken Lay on down literally violated the criminal code. The Justice Department is investigating. This is good. But it seems to me the administration might consider a special prosecutor in the case, too.

President Bush yesterday changed his tone about Enron, admitting that what its leaders appear to have done angers him. That's good. But more anger is needed, or rather a greater and more obvious commitment to get to the bottom of the scandal.

Representatives of Enron, as everyone knows, met with Vice President Dick Cheney's office before the administration put forward its energy bill. Congress is demanding the notes and records of those meetings. The vice president is refusing, on principle: It would be a violation of executive privilege. Mr. Cheney explained the other night to Tom Brokaw that the principle is an important one: A president and vice president simply have to preserve their ability to meet with and talk candidly with citizens and groups on policy issues, and the candor is compromised if all the details of every meeting are made public.

He is no doubt correct, and his arguments would, one suspects, be upheld by the courts.

But the administration could both insist on the principle of executive privilege and, in this case, waive it. Just waive it. They could announce that Congress can, in this special case, see all of the notes and materials on the Enron meetings.

Why should the administration consider doing this? Because the Enron case is special--huge, damaging to individuals and damaging to faith in free markets. Because, as I've said, Republicans have a special responsibility as the free market party to support the transparency of those markets. And there is a third reason, which is merely political, but then politics is rarely mere. If the administration continues to resist the request for documents and fight in the courts, its victory may well be Pyrrhic and its potential loss even more painful. Because as long as the administration doesn't come forward with everything, the issue remains alive and potent for the opposition's use.

(Yes, Enron was, like most big corporations, a corporate whore in terms of its contributions. It gave to both parties; it gave to both Clintons. But the Republicans will be hard-pressed to shake the Democrats' insistence that this was largely a Republican problem. And in any case it would be good to see just how Enron operated politically in its dealings with both parties--which is to say, it would be good for the public to have more information about big business and politics, not less.)

Finally, those who insist the law should change with respect to accountants certainly seem to be correct. It appears to be a conflict of interest when an accounting firm that audits a company also receives millions of dollars for consulting--that is, millions for advising the company on business decisions even as they're getting millions for reviewing its books. This is what appears to have happened with Arthur Andersen and Enron. It's hard to understand why and how this is legal.

It's not true that everyone wants more. It's not true that "everyone does it." And it's not true that free markets are rigged, a sucker's game. But it does seem that the party that stands for free markets and free economic dealings has a special responsibility to make sure that those who abuse them are given one big Texas whippin'.

You have been approved to receive a new EOP issued BlackBerry Wireless e-mail device. I am trying to schedule a time with you whena techician can take care of the installation of the unit at your desktop computer. The installation of a BlackBerry takes about 1 hour. The technician will be happy to review the BlackBerry configuration with you and answer any questions you may have.

The technician will need your password several times during the installation. If you do not plan on being available during the installation, please contact Lori Lorenzo so that she may be available to help the technician to log into your PC.

Please return this e-mail to me with a date and time that you would like the technician to perform your install and whether you will or will not be there at the time the techician performs the install. We will do our best to work into your schedule. The installers are normally available from 9:30 to 4:00.

Brent, can you track down the transcript of the television show referenced below? Thanks.

O'Connor On "Dateline"
SCOTUS Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, when asked to describe the atmosphere of the court during Bush vs. Gore: "I just think that's inappropriate."
More O'Connor: "There was a great deal criticism. It was a difficult case.
It's too bad that it came up." O'Connor, when asked if she wished the court had never gotten the case: "Of course. Of course, I do. We don't enjoy being thrust into the middle of political controversy. We don't always have a choice in what comes here." NBC's Couric: "There was speculation that Justice O'Connor might consider retiring in the near future. But in a highly unusual move for a member of the high court, she announced that she would not be stepping down any time soon. During our interview, Justice O'Connor also addressed speculation that if Chief Justice Rehnquist were to retire, she might be tapped to take his place. She told me she doesn't even think of that possibility" ("Dateline," NBC, 1/25).

The Washington Post, 05/05/91:

Mosbacher Flies the Corporate Skies) Free

Commerce Secretary Has Traveled to Official Meetings on Jets Provided by Businesses

By Dana Priest, Washington Post Staff Writer

Since becoming commerce secretary, Robert A. Mosbacher has flown to 30 of his 86 official meetings on corporate and private jets owned by former business associates, rich GOP contributors and companies that stand to benefit from his department's foreign trade policy initiatives.

Where he goes and whom he sees is determined, to some extent, by who offers a ride, according to department travel documents and a senior Commerce Department official who acted as a spokesman for Mosbacher on condition he not be identified. Mosbacher was said to be unavailable for comment.

The use of corporate planes is legal and Commerce officials said the practice does not influence Mosbacher's decision-making. Mosbacher or other officials often solicit the use of corporate aircraft for specific trips and the department "aggressively encourages" companies to pay for travel costs, the senior official said. In December 1989, Northern Telecom Inc. flew Mosbacher to Raleigh, N.C., to tour its plant, present a federal export award and attend a fund-raiser for Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.). The company had a 10-year equipment contract with the department's National Institute of Standards and Technology and won a $ 153,000 contract extension six months after the trip.

In April 1990, Philip Morris Companies Inc. flew Mosbacher to its board of directors' meeting and, in June, to a Nashville dinner sponsored by the Tennessee Republican Party. In September, Philip Morris International and RJR Nabisco signed a deal to sell billions of cigarettes to the Russian republic. It was Philip Morris's largest single export order. The department had encouraged U.S. tobacco manufacturers to pursue the Soviet market.

The Commerce Department, Northern Telecom and Philip Morris point to an extensive paperwork trail to underscore their contention that the travel arrangements do not influence departmental actions.

Unlike White House Chief of Staff John H. Sununu, whose use of military planes is under White House review, Mosbacher rarely used military aircraft. When he did, it was for high-level official meetings. He also flew commercial or reimbursed friends for personal trips on their planes, according to department and federal financial disclosure records.

Some executive departments have been permitted to accept corporate donations for official business for years. But unlike Commerce, the others generally have steered clear of them because of the potential for conflicts.

Agriculture Department spokeswoman Kelly Shipp said, "Almost anyone is [an interested party] because the job of the Agriculture Department is so large."

"There's just too many possible conflicts of interest," said Mary Brunette, a spokeswoman for the Department of Housing and Urban Development. "Flying commercially is inconvenient for everyone, but not enough to make it prohibitive."

Since 1964 Commerce has had legal authority to accept "gifts" from non-governmental sources, as long as the donor had no business pending before the department. A new regulation, which took effect in March, gave every department the right to have corporations directly subsidize some of their work. If a conflict of interest exists, the department may still accept a donation, as long as the benefit to the agency "outweighs concern that acceptance of the payment may or may reasonably appear to influence improperly the employee."

The regulation was written by the General Services Administration under the Ethics Reform Act of 1989 to make the policy uniform for all departments and agencies.

Commerce officials said the practice of accepting corporate travel saves taxpayer money, allows Mosbacher to spend more time with individual CEOs and enables him to attend more events because he can avoid the inconveniences of commercial airline scheduling.

No one company benefits from its generosity, said the senior aide to Mosbacher. Everyone has the opportunity to donate and the propriety of each offer is reviewed by department lawyers.

Most important, said the Mosbacher aide, the goals of the Commerce Department and American business are one and the same.

But critics say letting corporations foot the bill for government business may influence who gets access to government officials.

"The so-called saving of taxpayer dollars may well come as a trade-off of taxpayer confidence in the integrity of governmental decision-making," said Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, a public interest lobby group. "There's probably no area that could affect specific companies more than tax or trade policy."

With a limited travel budget, Commerce officials said, Mosbacher and his staff would be unable to do all they want to carry out the department's mission, which includes promoting international trade, technological advances and domestic economic development.

"Would it be better to have much less travel, far fewer events and have it all paid for by the government?" the Mosbacher aide asked. "If we can't accept [private flights], we'll have a tough time choosing which ones [events] to accept . . . and the press will yell and scream."

Of the 86 official trips Mosbacher took between Feb. 27, 1989, and April 12, 1991, the Houston oil multimillionaire flew free on corporate or private jets to 30 events, according to departmental documents.

On some occasions, corporations with an interest in opening up foreign markets -- also one of the main missions of the Commerce Department and the Bush administration -- gave Mosbacher free travel.

For example, to promote a proposed U.S.-Mexico free trade agreement, which is being opposed by many U.S. labor and environmental groups, Mosbacher used the corporate jets of oil and natural gas companies, a bank that has benefited from U.S.-Mexican border industry, and a large apparel manufacturer.

Oil and gas, financial services and the textile and apparel trades are all areas of contention in the debate over the proposed agreement.

Mosbacher took at least 10 trips on jets owned by his former business associates or people from whom he successfully solicited GOP contributions of more than $ 100,000 during the 1988 presidential campaign.

Mosbacher raised more than $ 25 million in large donations for George Bush and other GOP candidates during the campaign and he is reported to be the likely chairman of President Bush's reelection campaign.

On some of those trips, the owner of the aircraft and the destination of the trip had something in common. These include:

On June 22-25, 1989, Mosbacher attended an economic retreat at the Gerald Ford American Enterprise Institute at the Beaver Creek resort in Colorado. He flew on a plane owned by George N. Gillett Jr., who had contributed more than $ 100,000 to the GOP in 1988. Gillett Holdings Inc., which developed the Beaver Creek ski resort, encountered financial troubles after going $ 1 billion in debt to buy several television stations, according to published reports.

On March 30, 1990, Mosbacher flew on a plane provided by Transco Energy Co., a Houston natural gas company whose executive officer is a close Mosbacher friend from the secretary's days as a Houston oilman, Commerce officials said. The two-day trip included Texas meetings to pitch the proposed U.S.-Mexico free trade agreement, a speech to the Houston Savings Bond Campaign and to members of the Team 100 project, the Republican National Committee's large donor program.

The Republican Party reimbursed the company for the political portion of this trip and others in which Mosbacher combined official and political business, said the department.

In mid-May 1990, Chesley Pruet, a former Mosbacher business partner who was then on the board of Millsaps College, flew Mosbacher to Jackson, Miss., to speak at the college commencement. Pruet Ramco was a partnership between Mosbacher and Chesley Pruet Drilling Co. of El Dorado, Ark., which was set up to handle drilling operations in North Dakota and was dissolved in October 1989.

In June 1990, Mosbacher flew to Detroit on Heinz Prechter's plane to attend a fund-raiser for then-Rep. Bill Schuette (R-Mich). Prechter is a friend of Mosbacher's from whom the secretary also raised more than $ 100,000 for the GOP.

Prechter, president of the American Sunroof Company Inc. in Michigan, also flew Mosbacher to the International Auto Show in Detroit on Jan. 7, 1991, where he spoke at a Cadillac news conference about U.S. competitiveness and the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award the company had won.

Other big GOP donors have flown Mosbacher on official trips. They include real estate developer Alec Courtelis and investor and real estate developer Saul Steinberg, president of Reliance Group Holdings. Each contributed at least $ 100,000 to the 1988 GOP campaign.

In February 1990, Steinberg flew Mosbacher to Vienna and Prague. Mosbacher's wife, Georgette, was with her husband in Vienna, where he held meetings with senior U.S. officials, the Austrian economics minister, Austrian bankers, business leaders and others. He attended the Viennese ball and visited an art museum, said Commerce officials. He paid all of his and his wife's expenses in Vienna, they said. In Prague he attended six official meetings in one day.

When Mosbacher flew on commercial airlines, his meetings were usually to address industry associations or to hold high-level foreign trade talks.

These trips included: the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association; the International Home Furnishings Market; the Foreign Policy Association; the American Jewish Committee; the Business Roundtable Policy Committee, the Institutional Investors Conference; and the Council of 100.

He also flew commercially for trade missions and meetings with foreign ministers in Germany, France, South America, Australia, Poland, Mexico, Belgium, Japan, Singapore, Indonesia, Thailand, Spain, Italy, Switzerland and Korea.

Staff researcher Ralph Gaillard Jr. contributed to this report.

I'm not the message person but I suspect that given the current controversy any hearing on this subject is likely to generate more negative stories than positive ones. While we may have some GOP supporters who could ask the right questions and help shape the story, we will have Waxman, et al full bore against us. Also, as Brett points out, we're fighting the committee on executive privilege already and these two subjects are closely linked. Not that the committee would necessarily heed our request but perhaps it would be best if the committee decided against having this hearing.

GAO decides to sue White House seeking release of energy task force documents, congressional sources say

JESSE J. HOLLAND

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) _ The General Accounting Office has decided to sue the White House for access to documents from President Bush's energy task force, a congressional source told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

A decision had been expected from GAO Comptroller General David Walker, leader of Congress's investigative arm, all week. The GAO wants to force Vice President Dick Cheney, who ran the task force, to turn over documents on the meetings held last year with business executives as the Bush administration crafted a new national energy policy.

Some of the meetings included officials from the now-collapsed Enron Corp., a Houston-based energy broker with deep ties to Bush.

``We have been notified that they will be announcing their decision today and that their decision is that they will be moving forward,'' said the Senate source, speaking on condition on anonymity.

It would be the first time in the GAO's 80-year existence that it sued the executive branch. The lawsuit would be filed in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C.

GAO officials were calling congressional leaders at the Capitol Wednesday morning to tell them of the decision. An official announcement explaining the GAO's reasoning was expected after noon.

``They said this morning that they're sending the letter up,'' said a House source, also speaking on condition of anonymity. The letter itself had not yet been delivered to Congress, the source said.

Although lawyers for the White House and the agency had continued talks this week, Cheney said on Sunday that the dispute ``probably will get resolved in court.''

In resisting the GAO, Cheney insists that providing the list of industry executives would harm his ability to receive advice in the future and that the congressional investigators are overstepping their bounds. GAO, as a congressional agency, insists it has the authority to request the information.

Any GAO lawsuit would be highly controversial on Capitol Hill. The agency's investigation began after Democrats on April 19 requested that GAO investigate the conduct, operations and funding of the Cheney energy task force.

On Tuesday, some Republicans had threatened to try to block the suit.

``I think it may come to that,'' said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Congress' investigative arm shouldn't be ``trying to impose disclosure on internal White House meetings to determine policy,'' Hatch said. ``If you have to do that, pretty soon there wouldn't be any meetings.''

House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, said he and House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., planned to ``talk to the agency.''

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said he was researching to see whether the GAO would be overstepping its authority by taking on the administration.

``My concerns are that it would encroach upon the deliberative process and make it impossible for the vice president at the direction of the president to make a recommendation,'' Specter said. ``It's also a tricky area on executive privilege.''

Also Tuesday, an energy consultant suggested to the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee that Enron may have been using largely secret trades to manipulate energy markets.

Robert McCullough, a consultant whose clients include several Northwest utilities, testified that in the week after Enron announced its bankruptcy, the ``forward price'' of electricity in the West fell sharply. Enron had been a key trader in this market, which is used as a hedge against future power price changes and is unregulated.

``That certainly raises the question about whether Enron was manipulating the West Coast market'' by keeping prices artificially high, Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., said in response to the consultant's testimony.

McCullough said ``the clear implication is that Enron may have been using its market dominance to set forward prices.''

Other energy experts said other reasons may have been behind the price decline. Lawrence Makovich, a power industry expert at Cambridge Energy Research Associates, said it would be impossible to determine simply from the decline in price whether prices were manipulated.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission told the Senate panel it would investigate Enron's influence on wholesale electricity prices.

The San Francisco Chronicle reported Wednesday that then-Enron Chairman Kenneth Lay gave Cheney a three-page document last April detailing the energy trading company's arguments against price caps or other measures to stabilize electricity prices in California.

``Events in California and in other parts of the country demonstrated that the benefits of competition have yet to be realized and have not reached consumers,'' the memo said.

The newspaper said some of the positions included in the memo were included in Cheney's energy plan.

An Enron spokesman told the newspaper that Lay gave the memo to Cheney. Mary Matalin, an adviser to Cheney, said the energy plan included input from many sources.

A Rocky Milestone for Roe vs. Wade; Activists See Many Routes for Abortion Rights' Erosion

President George W. Bush likely will nominate at least one U.S. Supreme Court justice--a prospect of paramount concern for those who support the Roe vs. Wade decision. Justices selected by Bush and confirmed by the Senate have the potential to overturn the 1973 Supreme Court ruling.

"The Supreme Court is in crisis with the current 5-4 split," said Feminist Majority President Eleanor Smeal, referring to the division among the high court when it comes to upholding abortion as a constitutional right. "But it is not just the Supreme Court we have to worry about but the federal Court of Appeals--eight of the 12 circuit courts are already comprised of anti-choice majorities. . . . The worst-case scenario is that we lose all 12 circuit courts and we can't get a case to the Supreme Court."

Hearings begin in February for some of the federal court nominees, and NARAL has identified several nominees the group plans to challenge with a national grass-roots campaign. Topping that list is Judge Charles W. Pickering Sr., nominated to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which covers Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. "Pickering, among other things, led the right-wing charge for the Republican Party's first call for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion, he fought against choice and family planning as a Mississippi state legislator and he was an open opponent of the Equal Rights Amendment," said Michelman.

Privacy, Cameras in Court Are Senator's New Concern

By Linda Gasparello
White House Weekly
Tuesday, January 29, 2002

A week after a federal judge rejected cable network Court TV's petition to televise the trial of Zacarias Moussaoui, the first person indicted in connection with the Sept 11 attacks, questions about cameras in the courtroom and personal privacy dominated the Senate confirmation hearing for five of President Bush's federal court nominees.

Sitting in Thursday for Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.) asked Richard D. Leon, nominee to he U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, to comment on cameras in federal courtrooms. Leon has a special appreciation of the issue: he was deputy chief minority counsel for the U.S. Select Iran-Contra Committee—the second ranking counsel to Rep. Dick Cheney (R-Wyo.), and the Republican members of the committee—from March 1987 to March 1988.

Leon said that cameras in the courtroom are a challenging and difficult issue for Congress and federal judges to wrestle. "On the whole," he said, "it is a close-call question." Court TV, which is owned by AOL Time Warner and Liberty Media Corp., had argued in legal papers that the ban on televising federal criminal trials is unconstitutional because the U.S. Constitution gives the public the right to have access to courtroom proceedings. On Jan. 18, U.S. District Judge Leonie M. Brinkema essentially ruled that it is up to Congress to change the law barring cameras in federal courtrooms.

"Given the growing public consensus and favorable experience in the majority of states that allow cameras in their courtrooms, we are optimistic that the United States Congress will soon pass legislation permitting cameras in our federal courts subject, however, to the sole discretion of the trial judge," Court TV's chairman and chief executive officer Henry Schleiff said in a statement.

Leon told Senate Judiciary Committee members that he prefers "not to have cameras in the courtroom, but to provide special access for the press. Part of my concern is for the security of the jury and the witnesses."

Noting that prior to Sept. 11, Americans were concerned about the issue of information attainment, Cantwell asked each of the six appointees for their views on how to "balance the need for individual privacy against the issues of information collected by the government, or in other criminal investigations."

James Edward Gritzner, nominee to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Iowa, said: "There are two issues involved here: One would be a social issue, and the other would be a legal issue.

As a social issue, Gritzner said "people have an expectation of privacy, whether that has actually been provided to them by the Constitution or by statute. So they come to Congress and the courts with that expectation."

He added: "With regard to the legal expectation of privacy, certainly we know in constitutional law that there have been cases involving the concept of privacy. Whether they would apply to this situation [anti-terrorism] is still not a resolved issue."

Americans are looking at certain courts, he said, for "a high degree of vigilance in protecting their privacy—the concept of being left alone, being able to maintain your personal records, your own personal lifestyle.

"They're looking to both the courts and the Congress for assistance in protecting them not only under the current circumstances, but I think they felt that way on Sept. 10."

Having served as a prosecutor on national security matters, Leon said it is going to be an "interesting and difficult challenge to see that privacy interests are weighed fairly."

Jay C. Zainey, nominee to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, said that the courts and Congress should "look closely at the U.S. Constitution" for guidance on privacy issues.

Robert E. Blackburn, who has been appointed to the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, said that it will be "exciting and challenging" if he is confirmed as a judge. "The district-court level is going to be the first line of defense, really the first opportunity to balance two of our most important concerns: our fundamental right to privacy, perhaps our most cherished civil liberty, and our growing concerns about national security," he said, adding that there is a "well-developed body of law for jurisprudence on both of these issues."

There were two other issues that committee members raised at the hearing. Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) asked the nominees to comment on their experience with alternative dispute resolution. Calling it an "amazingly successful" process, Gritzner said he used it in his practice, and he would be "encouraged to use it to cut as much court time as possible."

Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa), who introduced Gritzner and U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy of Cedar Rapids, nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit, raised the subject of federal criminal sentencing procedures. Harkin brought up the case of an Iowa man, Dane Allen Yirkovsky, sentenced by Melloy to 15 years in federal prison for possession of a single .22-caliber bullet.

"What sort of country is this when you can get 15 years for possessing a single bullet?" he asked.

Harkin said that when he voted for mandatory-minimum sentencing, he was "trying to give judges the right to judge." But after reading about Yirkovsky's case in an editorial in the Jan. 21 edition of The Des Moines Register, he said: "I was wrong. I think it's turned into a sentencing nightmare."

Asked to comment on mandatory-minimum sentencing, Melloy said: "There have been certain cases where mandatory minimums have been imposed and I wished I had more discretion. Cases where I felt somewhat constrained. Yirkovsky is probably one of them, quite frankly."

Private Labor Lawyer Nominated for Spot on U.S. District Court

The Associated Press
Wednesday, January 30, 2002

A private labor lawyer who has never tried a case in federal court but served as a legal and political adviser to U.S. Sen. Lincoln Chafee is being recommended for a spot on the U.S. District Court in Rhode Island.

Chafee said Wednesday he has recommended that President Bush nominate William E. Smith, 42, of East Greenwich, to the court to fill a spot being vacated by retiring Judge Ronald Lagueux.

Chafee and Smith have known each other for about a decade, when Chafee became mayor of Warwick and Smith's law firm, Edwards & Angell, began doing legal work for the city. Smith served as the city solicitor, heading a team of Edwards & Angell lawyers as the city's counsel. "Right away, we had a number of contentious issues," Chafee said, noting a longstanding labor dispute with local teachers, a scandal that rocked the police department and a spate of disability-related retirements in the city. "Will was there every step of the way, giving advice."

REV_00139560

Chafee, a Republican, recommended Smith to President Bush in a letter sent on Wednesday. The senator said he expected Smith would be interviewed at the White House within the next two weeks.

If Bush nominates Smith, Chafee said he hopes it could be approved by the summer.

Smith, a native of Idaho where his father was a longtime state judge, received a law degree from Georgetown University in 1987. He is married and has two children.

Smith said he felt honored to have been recommended by Chafee. Smith, who served as staff director of Chafee's state office from January 2000 to January 2001, said he'd long harbored an ambition to be involved in public service.

"Being a federal judge is the highest form of public service, in my view, that any lawyer could be called to do," he said during a news conference on the steps of the federal courthouse in Providence. "It's the way I grew up."

Smith also served as a municipal court judge in West Warwick from 1993 to 1998, presiding over cases involving town ordinances, building codes, zoning and traffic violation complaints.

Chafee said he wasn't concern about the possible perception of patronage. He added that he has confidence that Smith has the requisite skills to be a federal judge.

"Yes, of course I do, or I wouldn't nominate him," Chafee said.

Second Pickering Hearing Slated; NAACP Questions Record

By Jason Straziuso
The Associated Press
Thursday, January 31, 2002

State NAACP leaders say Judge Charles Pickering has shown a "hostile attitude" toward civil rights cases - something the group will attempt to prove at the district judge's second nomination hearing next week.

Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., has been nominated for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

He had his first hearing in October. A second hearing has been set for Feb. 7, Senate Judiciary Committee spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said. Democrats insisted on a second hearing to review the Mississippi judge's unpublished opinions.

L.A. Warren of the Mississippi branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Thursday his organization has forwarded six Pickering decisions to the

REV_00139561

Judiciary Committee for review.

Warren said the six cases involve discrimination, labor and women's rights issues and will likely be brought up at next week's hearing.

"There's a pattern of a hostile attitude," Warren said. "It's the way he handled those cases by prolonging them. He controls the evidence that gets to the table. In a sense, that affects the outcome of the case."

Pickering said Thursday he looked forward to testifying before the committee, but he won't comment on specific issues until then.

A spokesman for Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said that Pickering has broad support.

"The people in Mississippi that know Judge Pickering know his integrity and understand that he is a well-qualified judicial nominee," Lee Youngblood said.

The Judiciary Committee has received 37 support letters for Pickering, including letters from former Democratic Gov. William Winter and 10 former presidents of the Mississippi Bar Association, Senate records show.

The committee has received 26 letters in opposition, mainly from women's and civil rights groups, including the Magnolia Bar Association, a mostly black lawyer's group.

In highlighting one of the six cases, Warren said Pickering heard a case in 2001 brought by Britton Mosely Sr., a black man, who alleged in a federal lawsuit that he was set up on drug charges and wrongly dismissed by the Mississippi Department of Corrections.

The alleged drug setup was caught on tape by Mosely, Warren said.

Warren said that Pickering heard the Mosely tape outside the courtroom and then didn't allow the tape into evidence.

Another issue that groups opposed to Pickering have raised is his 1990 testimony to become a U.S. district judge.

According to Senate records, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency.

However, a 1972 letter in the commission's files said Pickering, while a state senator, had "requested to be advised" by the commission about a group organizing pulpwood workers.

Having served as a prosecutor on national security matters, Leon said it is going to be an "interesting and difficult challenge to see that privacy interests are weighed fairly."

Jay C. Zainey, nominee to the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana, said that the courts and Congress should "look closely at the U.S. Constitution" for guidance on privacy issues.

Robert E. Blackburn, who has been appointed to the U.S. District Court for the District of Colorado, said that it will be "exciting and challenging" if he is confirmed as a judge. "The district-court level is going to be the first line of defense, really the first opportunity to balance two of our most important concerns: our fundamental right to privacy, perhaps our most cherished civil liberty, and our growing concerns about national security," he said, adding that there is a "well-developed body of law for jurisprudence on both of these issues."

There were two other issues that committee members raised at the hearing. Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) asked the nominees to comment on their experience with alternative dispute resolution. Calling it an "amazingly successful" process, Gritzner said he used it in his practice, and he would be "encouraged to use it to cut as much court time as possible."

Sen. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa), who introduced Gritzner and U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy of Cedar Rapids, nominee to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 8th Circuit, raised the subject of federal criminal sentencing procedures. Harkin brought up the case of an Iowa man, Dane Allen Yirkovsky, sentenced by Melloy to 15 years in federal prison for possession of a single .22-caliber bullet.

"What sort of country is this when you can get 15 years for possessing a single bullet?" he asked.

Harkin said that when he voted for mandatory-minimum sentencing, he was "trying to give judges the right to judge." But after reading about Yirkovsky's case in an editorial in the Jan. 21 edition of The Des Moines Register, he said: "I was wrong. I think it's turned into a sentencing nightmare."

Asked to comment on mandatory-minimum sentencing, Melloy said: "There have been certain cases where mandatory minimums have been imposed and I wished I had more discretion. Cases where I felt somewhat constrained. Yirkovsky is probably one of them, quite frankly."

Private Labor Lawyer Nominated for Spot on U.S. District Court

The Associated Press
Wednesday, January 30, 2002

A private labor lawyer who has never tried a case in federal court but served as a legal and political adviser to U.S. Sen. Lincoln Chafee is being recommended for a spot on the U.S. District Court in Rhode Island.

Chafee said Wednesday he has recommended that President Bush nominate William E. Smith, 42, of East Greenwich, to the court to fill a spot being vacated by retiring Judge Ronald Lagueux.

Chafee and Smith have known each other for about a decade, when Chafee became mayor of Warwick and Smith's law firm, Edwards & Angell, began doing legal work for the city. Smith served as the city solicitor, heading a team of Edwards & Angell lawyers as the city's counsel. "Right away, we had a number of contentious issues," Chafee said, noting a longstanding labor dispute with local teachers, a scandal that rocked the police department and a spate of disability-related retirements in the city. "Will was there every step of the way, giving advice."

REV_00139569

Chafee, a Republican, recommended Smith to President Bush in a letter sent on Wednesday. The senator said he expected Smith would be interviewed at the White House within the next two weeks.

If Bush nominates Smith, Chafee said he hopes it could be approved by the summer.

Smith, a native of Idaho where his father was a longtime state judge, received a law degree from Georgetown University in 1987. He is married and has two children.

Smith said he felt honored to have been recommended by Chafee. Smith, who served as staff director of Chafee's state office from January 2000 to January 2001, said he'd long harbored an ambition to be involved in public service.

"Being a federal judge is the highest form of public service, in my view, that any lawyer could be called to do," he said during a news conference on the steps of the federal courthouse in Providence. "It's the way I grew up."

Smith also served as a municipal court judge in West Warwick from 1993 to 1998, presiding over cases involving town ordinances, building codes, zoning and traffic violation complaints.

Chafee said he wasn't concern about the possible perception of patronage. He added that he has confidence that Smith has the requisite skills to be a federal judge.

"Yes, of course I do, or I wouldn't nominate him," Chafee said.

Second Pickering Hearing Slated; NAACP Questions Record

By Jason Straziuso
The Associated Press
Thursday, January 31, 2002

State NAACP leaders say Judge Charles Pickering has shown a "hostile attitude" toward civil rights cases - something the group will attempt to prove at the district judge's second nomination hearing next week.

Pickering, the father of Rep. Chip Pickering, R-Miss., has been nominated for a seat on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

He had his first hearing in October. A second hearing has been set for Feb. 7, Senate Judiciary Committee spokeswoman Mimi Devlin said. Democrats insisted on a second hearing to review the Mississippi judge's unpublished opinions.

L.A. Warren of the Mississippi branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said Thursday his organization has forwarded six Pickering decisions to the

REV_00139570

Judiciary Committee for review.

Warren said the six cases involve discrimination, labor and women's rights issues and will likely be brought up at next week's hearing.

"There's a pattern of a hostile attitude," Warren said. "It's the way he handled those cases by prolonging them. He controls the evidence that gets to the table. In a sense, that affects the outcome of the case."

Pickering said Thursday he looked forward to testifying before the committee, but he won't comment on specific issues until then.

A spokesman for Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said that Pickering has broad support.

"The people in Mississippi that know Judge Pickering know his integrity and understand that he is a well-qualified judicial nominee," Lee Youngblood said.

The Judiciary Committee has received 37 support letters for Pickering, including letters from former Democratic Gov. William Winter and 10 former presidents of the Mississippi Bar Association, Senate records show.

The committee has received 26 letters in opposition, mainly from women's and civil rights groups, including the Magnolia Bar Association, a mostly black lawyer's group.

In highlighting one of the six cases, Warren said Pickering heard a case in 2001 brought by Britton Mosely Sr., a black man, who alleged in a federal lawsuit that he was set up on drug charges and wrongly dismissed by the Mississippi Department of Corrections.

The alleged drug setup was caught on tape by Mosely, Warren said.

Warren said that Pickering heard the Mosely tape outside the courtroom and then didn't allow the tape into evidence.

Another issue that groups opposed to Pickering have raised is his 1990 testimony to become a U.S. district judge.

According to Senate records, Pickering testified he "never had any contact with the Sovereignty Commission," Mississippi's now-defunct segregation watchdog agency.

However, a 1972 letter in the commission's files said Pickering, while a state senator, had "requested to be advised" by the commission about a group organizing pulpwood workers.

Senators play politics with judicial choice
Jan 28 2002 12:00AM By the Editorial Board of the Union-Bulletin
The power to appoint federal judges is clearly vested in the president. Sens. Patty Murray and Maria Cantwell, both Democrats, are irate over President Bush's selection of Ronald Leighton to be a federal district judge for Western Washington. The senators believe Bush, a Republican, should have made the selection through a ``bipartisan'' process.
Funny, we heard the same sort of rant from former Sen. Slade Gorton, a Republican, when President Clinton, a Democrat, was in office. Yet, Murray wasn't too riled about the issue during the Clinton years.
Murray's and Cantwell's concerns ring as hollow today as Gorton's did a few years ago.
The power to appoint federal judges is clearly vested with the president. The Senate's role in the process is equally clear - it looks at nominees' qualifications to determine if they are fit for the post.
However, it is custom that the president consult with the senators from the state where the federal judge will be presiding. Not surprisingly, the president tends to take more seriously the wishes of senators of his own political party.
Murray and Cantwell, both seasoned political veterans, should understand that reality.
Yet, the pair have promised (or is that threatened?) to block Leighton's nomination unless the White House uses a bipartisan commission to make federal judicial appointments. The tirade is akin to a kid throwing a tantrum at a sandlot baseball game when he vows to take his ball and go home if he doesn't get to play shortstop.
The Bush administration is on high ground here. Perhaps, from a standpoint of political expediency, the administration should have catered more to Murray and Cantwell. After all, the Democrats do control the Senate.
Nevertheless, the White House has no reason to apologize. Bush asked Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., to head a selection committee. Dunn apparently asked Murray and Cantwell to appoint people to the committee, but they declined because the senators did not want to be obligated to support the commission's final four candidates.
Ultimately, we would like to see a truly bipartisan process used to select federal judges. But we are also pragmatists. This president, like all presidents, is going to take ideology and politics into account when making appointments.

Murray and Cantwell had an opportunity to be involved - to some degree - inthe selection process. Instead, they opted to play politics.

I assume you got all you needed for today.

You should be aware that beginning as early as Monday, we will be making available to defendants in the tobacco lawsuit Clinton, Gore, and Bush 41 records and emails, under an open-records discovery process by which they can select what they deem to be responsive, and then allow the Government to claim any privileges. This will be thus the first stage of a complicated process, which is designed to preserve all privileges and likely keep most of the PRA records that are finally produced to the d's under seal. All of the reps have been consulted and approved of this process (the Gore rep for this issue is Lisa Brown), as has Brad B.

>>> <Brett_M._Kavanaugh@who.eop.gov> 2/1/02 10:07:11 AM >>>
Gary: To reiterate, we urgently need the names and dates that Clinton and Gore representatives reviewed and ok'ed release of the e-mails and Barak transcripts referenced in today's New York Times article. Thanks very much.

On January 10, the Fourth Circuit held in United States v. Pierce that a conviction under North Carolina law for the crime of taking indecent liberties with a child is a "crime of violence" for sentence-enhancement purposes under the federal sentencing guidelines. The defendant's conduct underlying the indecent liberties offense -- which is descibed by the court in its opinion -- was truly gross and involved the seven year old daughter of the defendant's then-girlfriend.

Judge Gregory dissented. He included a footnote stating that "[t]he majority's description of the alleged events that led to the defendant's guilty plea to taking indecent liberties with a child is unnecessary."

White House Counsel's office has no objection to either except to raise a question about the reference to "minority groups" on page 3 of the prepared testimony. Is that reference supported by data that controls for wealth/income? If not, we would recommend deleting it.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

FINANCIAL EDUCATION

Introduction

Chairman Sarbanes, Senator Gramm, distinguished members of the Committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you this morning to talk about the vital importance of financial education. I am especially pleased to do so in the company of Chairman Greenspan and Chairman Pitt. Mr. Chairman, I commend you for focusing a national spotlight on this critical topic, which is so closely linked to our economic future. It is one, I might add, in which I have a deep and longstanding personal interest.

Need for Improved Financial Education

The U.S. financial system commands the respect and admiration of the world in large part because of the widespread availability of low-cost, high quality financial services. Technology and innovation have made possible a rich diversity of financial products to meet the individual needs of millions of American households and businesses.

Today's expansive menu of financial product offerings, however, has added complexity to the decisions Americans must make in choosing the financial products that best serve their needs. I recall a time not so long ago when, for a large number of Americans, mortgage rates were fixed, savings went into a bank passbook account, consumer goods were bought on a cash-only basis, and pensions all had defined benefits for retirement. Today, mortgage financing comes in a variety of packages, credit card use is ubiquitous, and savings investment vehicles range from CDs to mutual funds to individual stocks to annuities. Moreover, the importance of knowing how to invest savings wisely has risen exponentially with the decline in popularity of defined benefit retirement plans.

To be sure, the evolution of our nation's financial system has created wonderful new opportunities for Americans to meet their needs as consumers, while at the same time, building wealth and security for their and their families' economic futures. However, Americans need to be fully prepared and financially educated to take advantage of these opportunities. If we do not understand the most important concepts of personal finance, such as how to budget, save, invest and use credit wisely, then we are missing our full potential as individuals, as well as our potential as a country. I believe wholeheartedly in the noble ideal espoused by our President that "[t]he ambitions of some Americans are limited by failing schools and hidden prejudice and the circumstances of their birth. We do not accept this, and we will not allow it."

We have significant room for improvement in the area of financial education. Recent studies illuminate this fact. In one test of financial basics given to high school students, the average score was a disappointing 51 percent, with only one-tenth of students scoring above 70 percent on the exam. Remarkably, only fifty percent of high school students understood the concept of compound interest. Results were similarly disappointing when adults were tested: their average score was only 57 percent.

There is a tragic human and personal cost that our society pays for this lack of financial knowledge. All of us know family or friends who have had money problems at some stage in their life. We all know the terrible price in suffering, stress, and humiliation that is faced by those in financial trouble. Four in ten Americans admit they are living beyond their means, primarily because of the misuse and misunderstanding of credit. Between 1990 and 2000, personal bankruptcies rose by 69%, again stemming primarily from credit misuse.

A lack of financial knowledge is especially problematic for the most vulnerable members of our society. The poor, the elderly, and minority groups are some of the more likely targets of fraud and deception, identity theft, predatory lending, and other such abuses. Financial education is a crucial weapon in our arsenal to protect our citizens from these types of attack. Understanding personal finance is a consumer's first line of defense against financial rip-offs and scams. Those most vulnerable to these attacks are precisely the people who have the most to gain by a concerted nationwide effort to raise Americans' level of financial knowledge.

Current Efforts to Address the Problem

Considerable efforts are being made in the private and public sector to promote financial education. Our staff has completed a list of financial educational resources offered by the various Federal departments and agencies which is attached to my testimony for inclusion in the record.

As the attached document shows, no fewer than 10 federal departments and agencies, including the Treasury Department, offer a wide variety of financial education programs and resources. In addition, many states, Wisconsin, Maryland, and California, to name a few, have taken initiatives to raise the level of their residents' financial knowledge. Similarly, financial service providers have made extensive efforts in the banking, securities, and insurance industries to teach the public how to properly use their products.

Faith-based organizations and community groups have also promoted financial education. As we all know, talking about money, and especially about the state of one's own finances, can be difficult. Faith-based and community organizations tend to foster the trust necessary for their members to discuss these personal matters with them. Such groups can encourage people who have never saved before to begin saving; to think twice about making an impulse purchase; or to consider more deeply the need to focus not only on short-term consumption, but also on long-term investment.

A Focus on the Schools

These current efforts are important, yet much more needs to be done if we are to significantly raise the ability of Americans to more effectively master their financial lives. To be sure, our national strategy must address the financial educational needs of Americans in all walks of life. This morning, however, I would like to focus in particular on the need for more financial education in our nation's schools.

No better venue exists for us to reach such a large segment of the population than through our schools. No better mechanism exists for providing our nation's youth with the educational building blocks they will need to become competent consumers and managers of household wealth. By beginning the financial education process early, we can equip our youth with a foundation for making sound financial decisions throughout their lives. Indeed, in those states that have begun requiring personal financial education in high school, research shows that high school graduates have higher savings rates and higher levels of net-worth.

Of course, financial education must begin with basic literacy. A child with insufficient reading skills will never be able to comprehend a credit card application or a Truth in Lending disclosure. A child lacking basic math skills will never be able to balance a checkbook or compare credit card interest rates. Financial education programs will be successful only for those children who have mastered basic academic skills. This is one of the reasons why it was so important for the Congress to pass the President's education bill – the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 – signed into law on January 8.

This landmark legislation provides the most sweeping reforms of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act since it first became law in 1965. Included among the bill's provisions are requirements that states set high standards for achievement in reading and math and that they test every child in grades 3 through 8 to ensure that students are making progress in achieving those standards. The bill also includes specific language recognizing the importance of financial education efforts by local schools.

State and local educators are now undertaking the process of developing standards in math and reading, and the educational curricula that will help their students achieve those standards. In collaboration with Secretary Paige, I would like to take the opportunity of this hearing to call upon schools to integrate financial education into those standards and curricula – not as a separate discipline, but as means of exposing children to basic financial and economic principles at the same time they acquire core reading and mathematical skills.

Teaching a child how to balance a checkbook reinforces basic addition and subtraction. Learning how to calculate compound interest provides an excellent way to exercise knowledge of percentages. Reading lessons can include stories about children saving money to buy something special, or getting their first after-school job. For older children, assignments in English literature can easily be structured to include novels that not only build reading comprehension, but also help students explore and analyze principles of economic behavior.

Successfully interweaving financial education into math and reading standards required by the President's education program would be a giant leap forward in helping prepare our nation's youth to become financially literate adults. In the short run, building financial education into courses that are already required by all schools may be the most expeditious and least expensive way to make our educational system more responsive to students' financial educational needs.

At the same time, such efforts would complement initiatives already underway in several states to incorporate personal finance courses into school curriculums. Mississippi, Illinois, Idaho and New York have been leaders in assuring that personal finance is at least offered to all students before they graduate from high school. I would also note that legislation or resolutions have now been passed in Tennessee, Delaware, Louisiana, Michigan and Wisconsin to provide personal finance education courses. And Delaware and Wisconsin have established task forces to review the issue and make recommendations.

A Financial/Educational Alliance

In 1996, I had the privilege of co-chairing the Pennsylvania Advisory Commission on Academic Standards. This was a 17-member panel of non-educators, charged by Governor Tom Ridge with the job of reviewing education standards being developed for Pennsylvania. Our goal was two-fold: to ensure that the concerns of students, parents, and local businesses were considered in developing the standards; and to serve as a reality check, if you will, so that the standards reflected the real-world needs of students once they graduated and entered the workforce. The effort was highly successful and today Pennsylvania is recognized as having one of the highest quality education standards for its children.

Just as Governor Ridge called upon non-educators in Pennsylvania to partner with educators in the successful development of "real world" education standards, I believe the financial services sector can just as effectively partner with state and local educators in the development of financial education standards. For instance state banking superintendents, insurance commissioners, and securities administrators all possess a wealth of expertise and experience to contribute to the development of financial education guidelines. Private financial institutions also have much to offer in terms of expertise, as well as providing a source of additional resources to support teacher training and the establishment of financial education curricula and programs.

At the national level, the Treasury Department is focusing much of its existing financial education programs on youth. Just last year, we launched the Money Math program, a personal finance education kit for young people in grades 7 through 9. More than 110,000 middle school math teachers in 16,000 school districts nationwide received the kits free of charge.

In terms of new initiatives, I am pleased to announce that our Treasurer, Rosario Marin, has agreed to organize an effort to recruit the support of state treasurers in pressing for more financial education in the schools.

In addition, we are working to find a suitable way in which we can recognize, in conjunction with the U.S. Department of Education, local schools that have exhibited high distinction in the area of financial education. By providing a national spotlight for innovative educators who have developed successful programs for teaching personal finance, we hope to motivate their colleagues in other schools to follow suit.

In partnership with the Department of Education, I am willing to do whatever I can to promote financial education in the schools. As all of us know, education forms one of the most important bases of our free and prosperous society, and financial education skills figure prominently in the success with which we exercise our economic freedoms. As a grandfather of twelve wonderful grandchildren, I know well that children are America's future, and I would like to see an educational system that provides all American children with these vital life skills.

Other Areas of Focus

Youth education will not, of course, help the legions of adult Americans whose financial education skills fall short. Let me mention some of policy issues where we have identified financial education as key to protecting and promoting the financial health of the adult population.

I will begin with First Accounts, since I know this is a program in which Senator Sarbanes has a major interest. First Accounts is a grant program administered by the Treasury Department and designed to move a maximum number of "unbanked" low- and moderate-income individuals to "banked" status with insured depository institutions. Without basic financial services, low- and moderate-income individuals may have a reduced ability to manage their finances and may be limited in planning and saving for the future.

We issued a Notice of Funding Availability on December 27, 2001, and are providing applicants until March 20, 2002 to respond. In addition, we sent hundreds of copies of this Notice to community groups, faith-based organizations, labor unions in all fifty states, and dozens of financial institutions and their trade associations. We expect to use the First Accounts program to fund replicable model projects that develop financial products and services for these individuals without the need for ongoing public subsidies. In seeking applications, we have recognized that financial education can be a key component in persuading more Americans to open bank accounts. We will also undertake research to evaluate the success of the funded projects and to understand what products, services, educational initiatives, marketing techniques, or incentives are needed.

We should extend our efforts on financial education to retirement security. As you know, the President requested that I, along with Labor Secretary Chao and Commerce Secretary Evans examine retirement savings laws to determine whether any reforms are necessary to promote the ability of all Americans to plan for a secure retirement. Last week, the President announced our recommendations, which include proposals to increase the freedom of American workers to choose how they wish to invest their 401(k) assets, as well as to prevent corporate officers from selling company stock during a so-called "blackout" when workers are prohibited from trading in their 401(k) plans. A key feature of our recommendations is to expand workers' access to financial educational resources and professional investment advice, so that they can have the tools they need to make informed investment decisions.

Moreover, investors cannot learn what companies do not disclose. Recognizing that the Nation's corporate disclosure system is not working as well as it should, the President has asked his Working Group on Financial Markets to take a hard look at what we can do to fix it. Chairman Greenspan, Chairman Pitt, CFTC Chairman James Newsome and I are looking for ways to realign our corporate disclosure and accounting system with its basic purpose – to provide investors with the information they need to make informed decisions about public corporations' financial positions and prospects. Clear, accurate, and comprehensive disclosures are essential to all Americans' ability to invest and save. The key is accountability and responsibility for corporate officers and directors, accountants and auditors. We are committed to the President's call to hold corporate America to "the highest standards of conduct." I am confident that the Working Group's recommendations to the President will point the way to strengthening our disclosure regime.

Finally, I think it is important to make this observation: unwise financial decisions do not always stem from a lack of financial education. All too often, bad choices stem from economic despair. No amount of financial education will help individuals build their retirement nest eggs if their incomes barely cover their families' living expenses. No amount of financial education will help individuals escape the high fees charged on short-term, unsecured loans if their families are in need of food or medicine, and there is no other place to go for the funds. With more money in their pockets, people will be better positioned to make sound economic choices and provide for their and their families' economic futures. As we aggressively promote financial education, we must not lose sight of the larger goal to promote economic prosperity through the President's economic program.

Conclusion

The importance of high quality education to the future of our society and to our nation's economy can never be underestimated. I am reminded of a saying from the gentleman who graces the one hundred dollar bill - Benjamin Franklin, "If a man empties his purse into his head, no man can take it away from him." Those words written at the dawn of this great nation's history are as true today.

Financial education can be compared to a road map to the American Dream. I believe that we need to teach all Americans the necessary tools to read that map. As the Secretary of the Treasury, I stand ready to do what I can to improve the financial know-how of all Americans. A sound economy is made up of financially literate individuals. We as a society should strive aggressively to achieve higher standards of financial knowledge, so that all Americans can fully share in the economic benefits of our great nation.

WHAT THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IS DOING TO IMPROVE FINANCIAL EDUCATION

U.S. TREASURY EFFORTS

Bureau of Public Debt (BPD): Savings Bond Marketing Office

- MoneyMath: BPD's Savings Bond Marking Office launched the MoneyMath program to teach the importance of savings and financial literacy. *MoneyM*ath is an education kit for grades 7 through 9, which includes lesson plans and supplemental learning activities focused on savings and investing, money management, and spending and credit. The kits were provided, free of charge, to over 110,000 middle school math teachers in 16,000 school districts nationwide. MoneyMath was kicked off at the NASDAQ MarketSite in New York City on May 7, 2001. The Securities Industry Foundation for Economic Education, sponsor of the Stock Market Game, agreed to incorporate the MoneyMath kit into their distribution system. Partners for the MoneyMath program include the Jump$tart Coalition, the Center for Economic Education, Merrill Lynch, the Fannie Mae Foundation, the MetLife Foundation, the NASDAQ Stock Market, and many others.

- Savings Bond Program: Each year a month-long Savings Bond Campaign is held to encourage employees to save for retirement and other financial needs through US Savings Bonds.

- Treasury Hunt: In 2001, BPD launched Treasury Hunt, a web site to help people find out if they may have a matured savings bond, a bond that the Postal Service could not deliver, or an interest payment that was returned to Public Debt. Treasury Hunt helps in BPD's outreach effort to encourage the holders of some 20 million matured savings bonds worth $8 billion to redeem their bonds. Although nearly all of the owners of matured bonds that Public Debt has contacted know where their bonds are, two out of three did not realize that their bond had stopped earning interest.

Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

- The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) provides an on-line list of financial literacy resources including national and local organizations that offer and research financial literacy. In addition, the OCC promotes financial literacy through its six district offices. Under the regulations promulgated by the OCC, banks may be considered for credit under the Community Reinvestment Act for providing financial literacy services.

Office of Thrift Supervision

- Community Service Program: Since 1998, Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) employees participate as tutors in established, legitimate financial education programs in local schools and in the community as part of the agency's Community Service Program. Examples of financial education programs that the agency has participated in over the past three years include Operation Hope's Banking on the Future Day in Los Angeles, the Neighborhood Services of New York Financial Life Skills Course, Junior Achievement, American Bankers Association's National Teach Children to Save Day, Seahawks Academy Financial Literacy Training and Central City Lutheran Mission Financial Literacy Training.

- OTS also participates in the Department of Treasury's Partnership in Education (PIE) program, which is co-sponsored with the National Academy Foundation (NAF), by hiring summer interns from local high schools. The National Academy Foundation is a nonprofit educational organization that works to improve the quality of education for students and access to career opportunities by supporting partnerships between business and public schools. OTS employees have also served as board members of the National Academy Foundation Advisory Board.

- OTS has produced several financial literacy and consumer education publications. Primarily through the Community Liaison, a quarterly newsletter edited and produced by the Community Affairs staff, OTS works to inform and educate the industry about financial literacy issues and to highlight programs that the industry is involved in. The consumer education materials are available on OTS's web site.

- OTS Community Affairs staff is also active with the Women in Housing & Finance Foundation and a member of the staff co-chairs the Personal Finance Committee. The Personal Finance Committee provides an opportunity for WHF members to provide financial education to primarily low-income women and their families in the Washington, DC area by partnering with local community organizations.

Bureau of the Mint

- The mission of the Mint includes providing marketing, education, and advertising for U.S. coinage. The Mint, while not directly engaged in financial literacy efforts, supports a Treasury-led financial literacy initiative, and will use its resources to promote a national financial literacy initiative. The Mint has worked with the National Education Association (NEA) to educate young people about U.S. currency. In addition, the Mint has been involved in the Partnership in Education Initiative, described below.

Office of the Treasurer

- The Treasurer serves as an effective venue to communicate the importance of financial literacy.

OTHER FEDERAL EFFORTS

- Social Security Administration: The Social Security Administration (SSA) is engaged in a number of initiatives to educate people about the importance of planning for their financial future. SSA produced nationally broadcasted public service announcements that explain the importance of saving for retirement. In addition, SSA began mailing all workers copies of their Social Security statements that include customized benefit estimates. The purpose is to convey to the public the need for financial resources in addition to social security for retirement.

- Housing and Urban Development: In conjunction with the Treasury Department, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) published a 2000 report on predatory lending, which listed the need for greater financial literacy as a tool to curb predatory lending practices. The HUD website also provides the names of local financial education and housing counselors throughout the country.

- Department of Labor: In conjunction with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Department of Labor (DOL) created Money Smart, a financial literacy curriculum that is distributed through DOL's 800 "One-Stop" shops across the country.[1] In addition, DOL's Pension and Welfare Benefits Administration published "Savings Fitness: A Guide to Your Financial Future." In 1998, DOL held the National Summit on Retirement Savings, a two-day event at which the President and the Speaker of the House made remarks. Planning is underway currently for the second National Summit on Retirement Savings, which is scheduled to take place in early Spring of 2002.

- Department of Agriculture: The United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), through its Cooperative State Research, Education, and Extension Service makes financial literacy materials available throughout rural and agricultural areas. USDA is also launching a significant financial literacy initiative entitled "Financial Security in Later Life." The initiative's goal is to provide senior Americans with financial literacy information most relevant for them. In addition, the USDA is able to draw on the resources of academic professionals found throughout the U.S. in the Land Grant University System. Financial literacy courses are taught at many land grant universities, which pool together teaching plans and other educational materials intended for adults.

- General Service Administration: The General Service Administration places financial literacy information from various governmental sources on its website. For example, the DOL's "Savings Fitness: A Guide to Your Money and Your Financial Future" can be found there.

- Federal Trade Commission: In 1998, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) joined with the Securities and Exchange Commission, the North American Securities Administrators Association, and a number of public and private organizations including government, industry associations, and consumer organizations to launch a campaign to educate consumers about investing and saving. The FTC has an entire Webpage dedicated to consumer credit issues, investments, and abusive lending. In addition, the FTC continues to publish reports on personal finance issues such as "Avoiding Home Equity Scams," "Cancellation of Private Mortgage Insurance: Federal Law May Save You Hundreds of Dollars Each Year," and "Credit Repair, Help Yourself First."

[1] The Department of Labor established social service shops throughout the country. Known as "One Stop Shops," they often include job-training courses, financial education, and child care services.

REV_00139665

- Federal Reserve Board: The Federal Reserve Board (FRB) provides consumer and financial information via the twelve member banks, the Federal Reserve website, and a number of publications. The website features informational pages such as "Building Wealth, A Beginner's Guide to Securing Your Financial Future." Many of the FRB's publications are provided in Spanish as well as English. Publications include "Understanding the Process and Your Right to Fair lending," "Looking for the Best Mortgage: Shop, Compare, Negotiate," and "Keys to Vehicle Leasing: A Consumer Guide." Chairman Greenspan has publicly expressed his support for financial education. In January 2002, he gave an address that focused on the need for increased personal financial education at the Ninth Annual Economic Development Summit held by the Greenlining Institute.

- Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation:
(See the Department of Labor description for Money Smart above.)

- The Securities and Exchange Commission: The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) provides public information on the fundamentals of investing and investment products. The SEC provides information that is balanced and neutral regarding securities markets and the types of investment products available to average investors. In addition, the SEC works to ensure that its documents and the documents of the companies that it regulates are easily readable by typical investors.

- Department of Defense: Many military credit unions work with local commanders to provide personal financial education for military personnel.

Brett -- Thanks your quick help on this. One question -- WHO in Financial Management is the go-to person for doing these financial calculations -- for the percentage, or allocation, of the political vs. the official portion of these travel expenses? We're hearing rumors that some people think YOU do the math. Pls. point us in the right direction. Thanks -- McNally

Lawyers Oppose Release of Task Force Papers (Reuters)
By Susan Cornwell
Reuters, February 06, 2002
WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Releasing details of White House energy task force meetings last year would put a chill on future presidential deliberations, government lawyers told a federal court on Tuesday.
Critics of the task force say its behind-closed-door operations allowed interests such as Enron Corp. to influence the Bush administration as it drafted energy policy, while environmentalists were largely shut out.
But Justice Department lawyers representing the energy task force, which was chaired by Vice President Dick Cheney, said demands to see the documents about the task force's work were unconstitutional, adding that the documents themselves might be subject to executive privilege.
"In order for the executive branch to function effectively, a president and his senior advisers must be able to work in an atmosphere that protects the communications if the president is to get the blunt, candid advice upon which wise decision-making depends," the lawyers said in a brief filed with U.S. District Court in Washington.
The argument was filed in a case brought by Judicial Watch, a public interest law firm that has been widely described as conservative after it spent years in court dogging the administration of former President Bill Clinton, a Democrat.
The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, said last week it also would file a lawsuit for the White House energy task force records, setting up a possible constitutional clash between the executive and legislative branches before the third branch of government.
Environmentalists are also after the task force papers. The Bush administration, worried about an erosion of power stretching back to Watergate, has refused to hand over the task force documents to any of the groups seeking them.
RAISING EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE
Judicial Watch filed suit last July against the National Energy Policy Development Group, as the task force was called, demanding the administration release records on who the group met and when, and minutes of the meetings held.
Last week U.S. District Judge Emmet Sullivan ordered the government's lawyers to explain their contention that handing over the documents would harm the president's constitutional right to get candid advice.
"What is unconstitutional, then, is not merely the potential disclosure of documents, which may be subject to a claim of executive privilege, but a direct intrusion by the other branches into the process by which the president carries out his constitutional function," the task force lawyers said in reply on Tuesday.

Larry Klayman, counsel for Judicial Watch, said he thought the government lawyers had not explained their constitutional arguments, just re-stated them. Judicial Watch must file its answer by Friday, and a hearing is set for Feb. 12.

Noting the government's raising of the possibility of claiming executive privilege, Klayman said, "They are willing to take out the big guns if they have to. There must be some real good documents they are hiding."

The government's brief was signed by Robert D. McCallum, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, as well as U.S. Attorney Roscoe C. Howard Jr. and Anne L. Weismann, an attorney in the Justice Department's Civil Division.

Of the people in the book for DDC today, which ones can I not consider for the Ct Fed Claims?

Also, does anyone have thoughts about whether any of these people would/would not be suited for or interested in the Ct Federal Claims? (e.g. I would doubt someone like Peter Keisler would be interested in that court).

Concerning Constituent Mail

Last year's anthrax attacks have complicated the mail delivery process. All mail sent to the offices of the House of Representatives is being checked for biological agents. As a result the mail is being delayed. I thank you for your patience and invite you to continue contacting our District Offices or contact the Washington DC office via fax or email.

"Quote from Kenny....."

Improving Aviation Security

To protect against future terrorist attacks and to restore confidence in the airline industry, Congress passed the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, which President Bush signed into law on November 19, 2001. This vital law improves security at our nation's airports on several different fronts.

This measure increases the security of cockpit doors on airplanes and places armed sky marshals on domestic and international flights. All checked luggage must now be screened. National and international carriers are now required to provide passenger manifests. Flight crews will be trained in anti-hijacking procedures.

This legislation also creates the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to oversee, train and hire airport security personnel. All security personnel must be U.S. citizens and will be subject to criminal background checks. The TSA will also implement tough new passenger and baggage screening standards and will have the authority to make future changes to ensure airline security.

Addressing the needs of Victims:

We have as a nation responded to the attacks of September 11th by coming to the aid of our fellow Americans who were impacted by the attacks. The loss suffered by victims and their families cannot be put into dollar and cents. Congress, however, can take meaningful steps to ease the suffering of these unfortunate victims.

As a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, I helped craft and voted for the Victims Tax Relief Act. This bill, which President Bush signed into law recently, will ensure that the victims of September 11th and their families will not be subject to unanticipated tax liabilities as a result of the terrorist attacks.

People, organizations and companies have donated more than one billion dollars to help the victims of September 11th. Those who gave have every right to expect that every dollar of their charitable gift will be used to help victims. As a member of the Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee, I worked in a non-partisan way to ensure that donations reach those who have suffered as a result of the terrorist attacks.

The terrorist attacks had a negative impact on our economy. While we should do everything we can to create jobs and economic growth, we cannot ignore the plight of those who have lost their jobs and simply need a helping hand. I helped craft legislation, which has been approved by the House, that will provide extended unemployment benefits and tax credits to help those who lost their health insurance get coverage.

Military Response to Terror:

On September 14, 2001, the U.S. House passed H.J.Res. 64, which authorizes the President to use all necessary and appropriate force against those who planned, authorized or aided those who committed the attacks of September 11th. Moreover, this resolution authorizes the President to use military force against nations that harbored these terrorists in order to prevent future attacks. I joined overwhelming bipartisan majorities in both the House and Senate in voting to express Congress' approval of the use of force to respond to the terrorist threat.

To date, our military actions have been a success. The terrorist al-Qaeda network no longer enjoys safe haven in Afghanistan. The military campaign has broken the Taliban's oppressive grip on Afghanistan. We are winning the war, but the war is far from over.

Those responsible for the September 11th attacks are part of an organization with global reach. Their intentions are to kill innocent Americans and impose their intolerant views on others. To preserve freedom and live without fear, our nation's war effort cannot fail. I will continue to support the President's efforts to use every military, financial and diplomatic tool to eliminate the terrorist threat and those who provide safe havens to our enemies.

Providing for the Military:

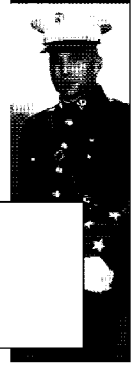
Our military must have the resources needed to win the war on terror. Those fighting this war have to continue to be the best-trained and best-prepared military units in the world. I was pleased that Congress approved the Defense Authorization bill which among other things provides for $19.2 billion increase in spending on defense over last year's levels.

To increase our safety at home, this bill allocates millions to respond to various terrorist threats, including weapons of mass destruction. It also provides increased funding for homeland security and resources to protect our military and diplomatic assets abroad. $7.8 billion is provided to continue the work necessary to establish a defense system capable to stopping a missile attack launched by a rogue state.

Our current military effort is unlike any other undertaken by the our nation. To defeat terrorists, our armed services must have access to the best intelligence. Billions in additional funding will be provided to enhance U.S. intelligence, reconnaissance, surveillance and targeting capabilities against terrorist organizations.

Finally, the Defense Appropriations Bill will give up to 15% pay raises for service members and reduces housing costs for our men and women in uniform. This is an essential commitment we must make to improve the lives of those protecting our freedoms.

Caption



Combating Bioterrorism:

Last year's anthrax attacks underscore the need to safeguard against biological and chemical attacks. That is why I voted for the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Response Act of 2001, when it was approved by the House on December 12, 2001. This bill will enable private and public institutions to respond to bioterror attacks.

Specifically, this bill authorizes funding for bioterrorism preparedness, increases the detection and response capabilities of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and expands our national stockpiles of medicines, vaccines and other supplies. It also tightens controls and increases enforcement on possession of biological agents. Food and drinking water safety measures would be increased as well.

Caption

Bolstering Domestic Law Enforcement:

The terrorists who attacked our nation on September 11 exploited our open society to achieve their evil ends. Law enforcement officials told Congress that there were several steps we could take to improve safety and stop terrorist cells from operating in the United States. To address those needs, I cast my vote in favor the USA PATRIOT Act. President Bush signed it into law on October 26, 2001.

The PATRIOT Act ensures Americans' safety and liberty are preserved at home. The bill blocks terrorist groups from raising money by improving our money laundering laws. It also increases criminal penalties for those individuals who support terrorists. The PATRIOT Act improves border security by increasing the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and U.S. Customs presence at our borders.

The anti-terrorism bill makes it easier for federal officials to stop terrorists from entering the United States and facilitates detaining and deporting foreign terror suspects. The package also makes it easier for law-enforcement and intelligence agencies to share information to stop future terror attacks.

Coddy,
Here's a mock-up of our mailer. There will be some text changes and we still need to fill some components, but the Bush picture is in there. Will this work for approval purposes? Thanks, Ianthe

Hi Coddy, my name is Ianthe Jackson. I work for Congressman Hulshof. Matt Miller sent this email along to me. I've pasted the photo of President Bush (Bush.tif) into this email that we'd like to use for a Homeland Defense mailer. We are having it worked into a mock-up and I will get that to you once it's in our hands. Thank you, Ianthe Jackson

I have a question regarding a photo of President Bush and a firefighter a the the WTC. Congressman Gutknecht used the picture in a mailer recently.
We would like to use the same picture.

In talking with Gutknecht's staff they said that they got the OK to use the picture from the White House. Can you direct me to the who at the White House that can Ok its use for us?

Thanks

Concerning Constituent Mail

Last year's anthrax attacks have complicated the mail delivery process. All mail sent to the offices of the House of Representatives is being checked for biological agents. As a result the mail is being delayed. I thank you for your patience and invite you to continue contacting our District Offices or contact the Washington DC office via fax or email.

"Quote from Kenny....."

Improving Aviation Security

To protect against future terrorist attacks and to restore confidence in the airline industry, Congress passed the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, which President Bush signed into law on November 19, 2001. This vital law improves security at our nation's airports on several different fronts.

This measure increases the security of cockpit doors on airplanes and places armed sky marshals on domestic and international flights. All checked luggage must now be screened. National and international carriers are now required to provide passenger manifests. Flight crews will be trained in anti-hijacking procedures.

This legislation also creates the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) to oversee, train and hire airport security personnel. All security personnel must be U.S. citizens and will be subject to criminal background checks. The TSA will also implement tough new passenger and baggage screening standards and will have the authority to make future changes to ensure airline security.

Addressing the needs of Victims:

We have as a nation responded to the attacks of September 11th by coming to the aid of our fellow Americans who were impacted by the attacks. The loss suffered by victims and their families cannot be put into dollar and cents. Congress, however, can take meaningful steps to ease the suffering of these unfortunate victims.

As a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, I helped craft and voted for the Victims Tax Relief Act. This bill, which President Bush signed into law recently, will ensure that the victims of September 11th and their families will not be subject to unanticipated tax liabilities as a result of the terrorist attacks.

People, organizations and companies have donated more than one billion dollars to help the victims of September 11th. Those who gave have every right to expect that every dollar of their charitable gift will be used to help victims. As a member of the Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee, I worked in a non-partisan way to ensure that donations reach those who have suffered as a result of the terrorist attacks.

The terrorist attacks had a negative impact on our economy. While we should do everything we can to create jobs and economic growth, we cannot ignore the plight of those who have lost their jobs and simply need a helping hand. I helped craft legislation, which has been approved by the House, that will provide extended unemployment benefits and tax credits to help those who lost their health insurance get coverage.

Military Response to Terror:

On September 14, 2001, the U.S. House passed H.J.Res. 64, which authorizes the President to use all necessary and appropriate force against those who planned, authorized or aided those who committed the attacks of September 11th. Moreover, this resolution authorizes the President to use military force against nations that harbored these terrorists in order to prevent future attacks. I joined overwhelming bipartisan majorities in both the House and Senate in voting to express Congress' approval of the use of force to respond to the terrorist threat.

To date, our military actions have been a success. The terrorist al-Qaeda network no longer enjoys safe haven in Afghanistan. The military campaign has broken the Taliban's oppressive grip on Afghanistan. We are winning the war, but the war is far from over.

Those responsible for the September 11th attacks are part of an organization with global reach. Their intentions are to kill innocent Americans and impose their intolerant views on others. To preserve freedom and live without fear, our nation's war effort cannot fail. I will continue to support the President's efforts to use every military, financial and diplomatic tool to eliminate the terrorist threat and those who provide safe havens to our enemies.

Providing for the Military:

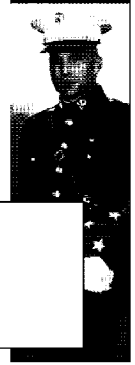
Our military must have the resources needed to win the war on terror. Those fighting this war have to continue to be the best-trained and best-prepared military units in the world. I was pleased that Congress approved the Defense Authorization bill which among other things provides for $19.2 billion increase in spending on defense over last year's levels.

To increase our safety at home, this bill allocates millions to respond to various terrorist threats, including weapons of mass destruction. It also provides increased funding for homeland security and resources to protect our military and diplomatic assets abroad. $7.8 billion is provided to continue the work necessary to establish a defense system capable to stopping a missile attack launched by a rogue state.

Our current military effort is unlike any other undertaken by the our nation. To defeat terrorists, our armed services must have access to the best intelligence. Billions in additional funding will be provided to enhance U.S. intelligence, reconnaissance, surveillance and targeting capabilities against terrorist organizations.

Finally, the Defense Appropriations Bill will give up to 15% pay raises for service members and reduces housing costs for our men and women in uniform. This is an essential commitment we must make to improve the lives of those protecting our freedoms.

Caption



Combating Bioterrorism:

Last year's anthrax attacks underscore the need to safeguard against biological and chemical attacks. That is why I voted for the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Response Act of 2001, when it was approved by the House on December 12, 2001. This bill will enable private and public institutions to respond to bioterror attacks.

Specifically, this bill authorizes funding for bioterrorism preparedness, increases the detection and response capabilities of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and expands our national stockpiles of medicines, vaccines and other supplies. It also tightens controls and increases enforcement on possession of biological agents. Food and drinking water safety measures would be increased as well.

Caption

Bolstering Domestic Law Enforcement:

The terrorists who attacked our nation on September 11 exploited our open society to achieve their evil ends. Law enforcement officials told Congress that there were several steps we could take to improve safety and stop terrorist cells from operating in the United States. To address those needs, I cast my vote in favor the USA PATRIOT Act. President Bush signed it into law on October 26, 2001.

The PATRIOT Act ensures Americans' safety and liberty are preserved at home. The bill blocks terrorist groups from raising money by improving our money laundering laws. It also increases criminal penalties for those individuals who support terrorists. The PATRIOT Act improves border security by increasing the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and U.S. Customs presence at our borders.

The anti-terrorism bill makes it easier for federal officials to stop terrorists from entering the United States and facilitates detaining and deporting foreign terror suspects. The package also makes it easier for law-enforcement and intelligence agencies to share information to stop future terror attacks.

I know we are all swamped getting ready for tomorrow's hearing, but I think it would be a good idea for us to touch base late this afternoon to see where we are, collectively. I was thinking in the neighborhood of 6:30 p.m.
Ideally, we can do a conference call so that we can do this from our respective offices and keep it brief. DOJ, do you have the capacity to set this up by e-mailing us the number to call?

Libby -- The Judge told me he wants to have a meeting to discuss our problematic judicial vacancies and candidates. I'm guessing that this a 45 minute meeting. Can you identify some time on the schedule for this purpose? Thanks.

Senate Passes 13-Week Extension In Unemployment Benefits, Kills Broader Stimulus. NBC (2/6, story 5, Brokaw) reports, &President Bush's economic stimulus package is dead. Democrats in the Senate shelved the bill after Republicans couldn't muster the votes to get over a procedural hurdle.
Republicans called Majority Leader Tom Daschle an obstructionist. Daschle said the tax cuts in the bill favored the wealthy and businesses much too heavily. The Senate did pass a 13-week extension of unemployment benefits.8

More money for unemployed people and no tax cuts?
I want my money back.

Judge Finds Iran Liable For $56 Million In Wrongful Death. The New York Times (2/7, A26) reports, &A federal judge yesterday granted a $56 million damage award to the family of an American killed in a 1996 terrorist bombing in Israel, but the family faces a difficult battle to collect the money. US District Judge Royce C. Lamberth specified in a 23-page opinion that the widow and children of Ira Weinstein should receive the money from Iran, which has been identified in several court cases as the sponsor of the militant group Hamas. Hamas had claimed credit for the bus bombing.8 The Times adds, &But whether Iran will ever pay the judgment is an open question. The government there has ignored this and similar lawsuits. (The United States has paid about $350 million from the general treasury to satisfy some claims, and it may later pursue Iran for repayment from the balance of a $400 million military sales account that dates back to the time of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.8

Can we do a conference call on this at 10:15? Best way to work it on short notice is to have Brett call Carl at 4-3951 and we'll loop in OLC at 4-2048; Collins at 4-6753; and Crim at 3-8579 - is that doable for everyone?

What about taking this one a notch further and stating that we have prepared a redacted version of that particular document that we are willing to show them at the meeting? (Assuming that we can do such a redaction without delaying the letter.)

PUBLIC CITIZEN, et al.
v.
Frank BURKE, Acting Archivist, National Archives & Records Administration, et al.
Appeal of Richard M. NIXON.
Nos. 87-5194, 87-5215.
Argued Jan. 12, 1988.
Decided April 12, 1988.

Action was brought challenging regulations issued under the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act by the Archivist of the United States, as official charged with custody of materials of former president, governing disclosure of some of those materials. The United States District Court for the District of Columbia, George H. Revercomb, J., 655 F.Supp. 318, upheld challenge, and appeal was taken. The Court of Appeals, Silberman, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) there was no constitutional requirement that Archivist acquiesce in any claim of executive privilege asserted by former president to block disclosure of materials, and (2) regulations, as interpreted to oblige Archivist to acquiesce in any claim of executive privilege by former president, were contrary to PRMPA and, therefore, could not be sustained.

Affirmed.

Before SILBERMAN and SENTELLE, Circuit Judges, and HAROLD H. GREENE, [FN*] Judge, United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

FN* Sitting by designation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. õ 292(a).

Opinion for the Court filed by Circuit Judge SILBERMAN.

SILBERMAN, Circuit Judge:
This case involves a challenge to regulations issued under the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act of 1974 ("PRMPA"), note following 44 U.S.C. õ 2111 (1982). In March of 1985, the Archivist of the former President Nixon, published regulations governing disclosure of certain of these materials. The Justice Department opined that the regulations must be "interpreted" for constitutional reasons as obliging the Archivist to acquiesce in any claim of executive privilege asserted by the former President to block disclosure of materials, and the Archivist has adopted that interpretation.

United States, the official charged with custody of the materials of

Appellees, Public Citizen, Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, and writer David A. Bollier challenged that interpretation successfully in the district court, and the government appeals. Since the Archivist's regulations, as interpreted by the Justice Department, are premised on what we believe is a misunderstanding of the Constitution, we agree with the district *1475 court that the agency's regulations cannot be upheld with the gloss placed upon them by the Justice Department. SEC v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80, 94, 63 S.Ct. 454, 462, 87 L.Ed. 626 (1943). The district court, 655 F.Supp. 318, is therefore affirmed.

I.
The Nixon Papers Act has engendered much litigation since its passage in 1974. See Nixon v. General Servs. Admin., 433 U.S. 425, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 53 L.Ed.2d 867 (1977); Nixon v. Freeman, 670 F.2d 346 (D.C.Cir.), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1035, 103 S.Ct. 445, 74 L.Ed.2d 601 (1982); Allen v. Carmen, 578 F.Supp. 951 (D.D.C.1983). The principal intent of Congress in passing PRMPA was to maintain a publicly available historical record of the Nixon presidency by gaining control over some 42 million pages of documents and 880 tape recordings from former President Nixon by in effect abrogating Mr. Nixon's depository agreement with Arthur F. Sampson, Administrator of the General Services Administration ("GSA"). H.R.Rep. No. 1507, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 2-4 (1974). The Nixon-Sampson Agreement, announced on September 8, 1974, the day then President Ford pardoned Mr. Nixon, gave former President Nixon "all legal and equitable title" to the materials, the power to control access to the materials, the right to withdraw any portion of the materials after three years, and the assurance that all tape recordings would be destroyed upon Mr. Nixon's death or September 1, 1984, whichever was earlier. See Nixon v. Sampson, 389 F.Supp. 107, 160-62 (D.D.C.1975) (App. A., Nixon- Sampson Agreement). Congress entrusted the Administrator of the GSA with custody of the Nixon materials--an action the Supreme Court subsequently upheld as not unconstitutional, at least on its face. Nixon v. General Servs. Admin., 433 U.S. 425, 97 S.Ct. 2777, 53 L.Ed.2d 867. Although the Administrator was replaced by the Archivist in 1984 as the official in charge of the materials, [FN1] the Act and its goals have remained largely intact. PRMPA requires the Archivist to promulgate regulations for public access, taking into account seven factors ranging from the "need" to disclose information about "Watergate" to the "need to protect any party's opportunity to assert any legally or constitutionally based right or privilege which would prevent or otherwise limit access." PRMPA õ 104(a). [FN2] Congress *1476 intended PRMPA to "provide the public with the full truth, at the earliest reasonable date, of the abuses of government power" during the "Watergate" period. H.R.Rep. No. 1507, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 1-3 (1974). In order to protect its interest in disclosure, Congress at first enacted a legislative veto provision in õ 104(b), but after INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 103 S.Ct. 2764, 77 L.Ed.2d 317 (1983) held unconstitutional Congress' use of the one-House veto, it settled on a requirement that the regulations not take effect until sixty days after their submission to Congress, PRMPA õ 104(b) (Supp. II 1984).

FN1. In 1984, Congress established the National Archives and Records Administration ("NARA") as an independent agency within the Executive Branch to administer the presidential papers and tape recordings of Mr. Nixon and to supervise the screening, processing, and preparation of those materials for public access. National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984, 44 U.S.C. õõ 2101-2118 (Supp. II 1984). Congress provided that the Archivist be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, be removable by the President, and that the Archivist "shall be appointed without regard to political affiliations and solely on the basis of professional qualifications." 44 U.S.C. õ 2103(a). Congress' intent was to ensure that "archival and records management decisions would be made on a professional basis unaffected by political considerations or other extraneous factors." S.REP. NO. 373, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 13 (1984) U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1984, 3865, 3877; see also H.R.CONF.REP. NO. 1124, 98th Cong., 2d Sess. 20 (1984).

FN2. Section 104(a) requires in full:

The Archivist shall, within ninety days after the date of enactment of this title, submit to each House of the Congress a report proposing and explaining regulations that would provide public access to the tape recordings and other materials referred to in section 101. Such regulations shall take into account the following factors:

(1) the need to provide the public with the full truth, at the earliest reasonable date, of the abuses of governmental power popularly identified under the generic term "Watergate";

(2) the need to make such recordings and materials available for use in judicial proceedings;

(3) the need to prevent general access, except in accordance with appropriate procedures established for use in judicial proceedings to information relating to the Nation's security;

(4) the need to protect every individual's right to a fair and impartial trial;

(5) the need to protect any party's opportunity to assert any legally or constitutionally based right or privilege which would prevent or otherwise limit access to such recordings and materials;

(6) the need to provide public access to those materials which have general historical significance, and which are not likely to be related to the need described in paragraph (1); and

(7) the need to give to Richard M. Nixon, or his heirs, for his sole custody and use, tape recordings and other materials which are not likely to be related to the need described in paragraph (1) and are not otherwise of general historical significance.

Under the current, sixth set of regulations, [FN3] the Archivist prepares the Nixon materials for public access by organizing them into "integral file segments," which are "intelligible and complete unit[s] for purposes of historical research." Freeman, 670 F.2d at 352 n. 11. Access is tempered, however, by the Archivist's segregation of certain restricted materials: for example, materials that are private or that neither relate to "abuses of power" nor have general historical significance are not released. 36 C.F.R. õ 1275.46(b) (1987); see also id. õ 1275.50(a) (no access if release of Watergate materials would violate a federal statute or is subject to a claim of privilege); id. õ 1275.52(b) (no access if release of non-Watergate materials would disclose trade secrets or constitute libel or an invasion of personal privacy).

FN3. The first three sets of regulations were rejected by Congress, using its one-House legislative veto. See Nixon v. Freeman, 670 F.2d at 349 n. 4. The fourth set of regulations became effective December 16, 1977, 42

Fed.Reg. 63,626, but they were later modified in 1980 pursuant to a settlement agreement with former President Nixon. Freeman, 670 at 349-50. The fifth set became effective on March 7, 1980. 45 Fed.Reg. 14,85 6 (1980). They survived an initial attack by President Nixon in Freeman, but they were ultimately struck down as poisoned by the Act's legislative veto provision. Allen v. Carmen, 578 F.Supp. 951 (D.D.C.1983). On March 29, 1985, the Archivist, with the blessing of the specially empaneled Nixon Materials Regulations Review Group, filed a notice of proposed rulemaking, announcing his intention essentially to repromulgate the fifth set of regulations. 50 Fed.Reg. 12,575. After the close of the comment period, the Civil Division of the Justice Department reviewed the regulations and proposed no significant changes. See Review of Nixon Presidential Materials Access Regulations: Hearings

Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Gov't Operations, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 176, at 256 (1986) (Letter from Richard K. Willard, Acting Assistant Attorney General Civil Division to Gary L. Brooks, Acting General Counsel National Archives (July 19, 1985)). This sixth set of regulations became effective June 26, 1986 and is the subject of this appeal.

Once a segment is fully prepared, the Archivist is obliged to publish in the Federal Register notice of his intent to provide public access. Id. õ 1275.42(b). This notice must identify the materials to be made public and also apprise any interested person that he is entitled to assert a legal or constitutional right or privilege to halt access. Those who are to receive special notice include former President Nixon and any individual whose name appears in the materials. If there is a complaint protesting disclosure, the interested individual may file his objection with the Archivist, who, according to the language of the regulations, is responsible for the decision in those cases involving claims of privilege. Id. õ 1275.44(a).
Before publication of this sixth version of the regulations, the Archivist, pursuant to Executive Order No. 12,291, forwarded the regulations to the Office of Management and Budget ("OMB") for clearance. OMB in turn requested the views of the Justice Department's Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") as to whether the proposed regulations adequately honored õ 104(a)(5) of PRMPA concerning claims of privilege. OLC responded by memorandum asserting that the language of the regulations--insofar as they authorized the Archivist to determine the merits of an assertion of executive privilege--would not be consistent with the Constitution. According to OLC, if either an incumbent President or former President Nixon were to assert executive privilege with respect to any document or group of documents, the Archivist would be obliged to honor that claim and a requester could only challenge the assertion of executive privilege in federal court. The Archivist did not formally modify the regulations to conform to OLC's view, but has, since publication, indicated his determination to conform fully to the Justice Department's opinion. Testifying before Congress, the Archivist, Dr. Frank G. Burke, said "Because approval by the [OMB] of our regulations was conditioned upon the Department of Justice opinion and because the Department of Justice represents the National Archives in all litigation, we consider the opinion binding upon our administration of the Nixon materials." Review of Nixon Presidential Materials Access Regulations: Hearing Before a Subcomm. of the Comm. on Gov't Operations, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. 176, at 43 (1986) (testimony of Frank G. Burke, National Archivist); see also Letter from Frank G. Burke to Hon. Thomas P. O'Neill (Feb. 26, 1986) (reporting the final set of PRMPA regulations with OLC memorandum interpretation). [FN4] All parties to this litigation agree that the regulations have essentially been modified to accord with the Justice Department's views and it is as modified that they were challenged in the district court by appellees. [FN5]

FN4. As the government's brief points out, however, the Deputy Administrator of OMB testified that while OMB expected the Archivist to follow the Justice Department's opinion, OMB had not intended to condition the issuance of the regulation on compliance with the opinion. We therefore take the government's position to be that if the Justice Department's opinion is rejected by this court, the regulations are to stand as promulgated.

FN5. Appellants agree that Public Citizen's challenge to the regulations is now ripe for review in light of former President Nixon's pending claims of executive privilege and the Archivist's expressed intention to follow the OLC memorandum.

II.

The statute is not explicit as to whether Congress intended the Archivist to determine himself the merits of a claim of executive privilege. We therefore must consider whether the government's construction of the statute is entitled to deference. Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 467 U.S. 837, 842-43 & n. 9, 104 S.Ct. 2778, 2781 n. 9, 81 L.Ed.2d 694 (1984). Appellees argue that deference would be manifestly inappropriate here since Congress originally delegated its interpretation to GSA and subsequently, to ensure professional non-partisan implementation, to the Archivist. And, as is quite clear, the Archivist did not originally interpret the statute as the Justice Department would wish; in fact, the Archivist does not explicitly embrace OLC's view, he only acquiesces in OLC's opinion.

The doctrine of administrative law obliging the Judiciary to defer to an administrative agency's interpretation of a statute the agency is charged with enforcing does in part, as appellees suggest, rest on the assumption that a specific agency's expertise is greater than the court's--and therefore that agency is likely to understand congressional purpose, in the zone of its expertise, more profoundly than the Judiciary. But deference is required also because the Executive Branch, populated by political appointees, is thought to have greater legitimacy than the non-political Judiciary in resolving statutory ambiguities, in light of policy concerns, when congressional intent is unclear. Chevron, 467 U.S. at 864-66, 104 S.Ct. at 2792-93. Of the Executive Branch officers, the President, of course, embodies the ultimate political legitimacy and therefore his views as to the manner by which his appointees will interpret a statute may not be lightly disregarded, see the Judiciary to refuse deference merely on the grounds that it can be shown that the agency's interpretation was one pressed by the President upon reluctant subordinates. Cf. Chevron, 467 U.S. at 865- 66, 104 S.Ct. at 2792-93. Indeed, even the inquiry might raise separation of powers concerns.

Sierra Club v. Costle, 657 F.2d 298, 405 (D.C.Cir.1981); see also In Re: Sealed Case, 838 F.2d 476, 488-89 & n. 21 (D.C.Cir.1988), prob. juris. noted sub nom. Morrison v. Olson, --- U.S. ----, 108 S.Ct. 1010, 98 L.Ed.2d 976 (1988). [FN6] Since the incumbent President, by virtue of Article II's command that he take care that the laws be faithfully executed, quite legitimately guides his subordinates' interpretations of statutes, it seems anomalous for *1478

FN6. We assume that OLC's view reflects the President's.

[1] We need not decide, however, whether appellees are correct in contending deference should not be afforded because the interpretation is not truly that of the Archivist. We agree with appellees that deference is inappropriate here for a second reason they advance; the government's administrative position is not, in any meaningful sense, an interpretation of the statute. The OLC memorandum is driven entirely by its constitutional reasoning; it makes no effort to ground its view of the statute on congressional purpose, even if such purpose is understood very broadly. Chevron, 467 U.S. at 843 & n. 9, 104 S.Ct. at 2781 n. 9; SEC v. Chenery, 332 U.S. 194, 200, 67 S.Ct. 1575, 1579, 91 L.Ed. 1995 (1947); Cablevision Sys. Dev. Co. v. Motion Picture Ass'n of Am., 836 F.2d 599, 609 (D.C.Cir.1988). Rather, OLC's position fairly read is that the regulations must carry its gloss, otherwise, they would be unconstitutional, which of course is simply another way to say the statute would be unconstitutional if interpreted as the Archivist's regulations (without OLC's gloss) do. [FN7] The federal Judiciary does not, however, owe deference to the Executive Branch's interpretation of the Constitution. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 703-05, 94 S.Ct. 3090, 3105-06, 41 L.Ed.2d 1039 (1974).

FN7. We also note that the OLC interpretation abruptly departs from the uniform prior interpretation by GSA and the Archivist, under which the Archivist had the initial responsibility to decide individual claims of executive privilege by the former President. See Freeman, 670 F.2d at 359.

[2] The government's constitutional argument is essentially this: An executive privilege claim could be raised by the incumbent President to release any of the Nixon papers. In that event, it is wholly inconsistent with Article II to contemplate the Archivist, an appointee of the President, independently determining whether the President's claim is meritorious. The Archivist would instead be obliged to honor the claim of his constitutional superior. Since, moreover, a former President retains his right to claim executive privilege, Nixon v. General Servs. Admin., 433 U.S. at 448-49, 97 S.Ct. at 2792-93, it follows according to the government that the Archivist must afford him the same deference that he gives the incumbent President: "[J]ust as we believe ... that the Archivist must and will honor any claim of executive privilege asserted by an incumbent President, we believe that the Archivist must and will treat any claim by a former President in the manner outlined in this opinion." Assuming arguendo that the government is correct in its premise--we recognize its argument on that point is powerful--its conclusion does not follow. Ronald Reagan, not Richard Nixon, is the constitutional superior of the Archivist. Ronald Reagan has the constitutional power to direct the Archivist, not Richard Nixon.

The OLC memorandum acknowledges, indeed insists, that in the event there were to be disagreement between an incumbent President and former President Nixon as to whether documents should be disclosed (the disagreement could involve the incumbent President favoring either disclosure or non-disclosure) the Archivist would be obliged to follow the direction of the incumbent. To be sure, OLC believes an incumbent President should honor the claims of executive privilege interposed by a former President, but that is argued seemingly as a question of policy, not law, because OLC recognizes "this principle must yield when it conflicts with the discharge of the incumbent's constitutional responsibilities." It may well be, as OLC observes, that a former President's privilege is diminished if an incumbent President sits "as judge" of the validity of the claim, but that seems an overstatement of the effect of the regulations. After all, even if the incumbent President were to determine that certain documents over which former President *1479

Nixon asserted executive privilege should be disclosed in order to satisfy the incumbent President's constitutional responsibilities in the event Mr. Nixon brought suit to stop disclosure, a federal court would do the "judging."

In short, since the incumbent President is not constitutionally obliged to honor former President Nixon's invocation of executive privilege with respect to the Nixon papers, we see no reason why the Archivist--an appointee of the incumbent President--is himself constitutionally compelled to afford any more deference to Mr. Nixon's claim than would be the incumbent President. OLC's discomfort with the role that the Archivist would play under the regulations as written suggests more notions of lese majeste than unconstitutionality.
We find no support for OLC's constitutional argument in Nixon v. General Services Administration. The Supreme Court recognized that an incumbent President--as opposed to a former President--is in the "best position to assess the present and future needs of the Executive Branch, and to support invocation of the privilege accordingly." 433 U.S. at 449, 97 S.Ct. at 2793. Indeed, former Presidents' "expectations of the confidentiality of executive communications" is understood to erode over time. Id. at 451, 97 S.Ct. at 2794; Freeman, 670 F.2d at 356. That suggests, therefore, that an incumbent President, aided perhaps by his close subordinates, must exercise some discrimination and judgment with respect to a former President's assertion of executive privilege if he wishes to support it. To say, as does OLC, that Mr. Nixon's invocation of executive privilege cannot be disputed by the Archivist, a subordinate of the incumbent President, but must rather be evaluated by the Judiciary in the first instance is in truth to delegate to the Judiciary the Executive Branch's responsibility as set forth in the statute and the accompanying regulations. It may well be unpleasant for the Executive Branch to be forced to consider the host of difficult questions that arise in this area, and the statute may place the incumbent President in an awkward position by obligating him to take a position on claims of executive privilege put forward by former President Nixon. Nonetheless, since the Archivist is part of the Executive Branch, we do not see how the incumbent President's responsibility to take care that the laws be faithfully executed can properly be transferred to the Judiciary. [FN8]

FN8. Appellant Nixon also claims that the Archivist's determination of his claim in the first instance creates an unconstitutional delegation to non-Article III officers, as in Northern Pipeline Construction Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S.Ct. 2858, 73 L.Ed.2d 598 (1982) (opinion of Brennan, J.). But unlike Marathon, where Congress had created a bankruptcy court in each judicial district as an adjunct to the district court, placing the initial determination of claims concerning the documents in the Archivist does not disturb our constitutional scheme whereby essential attributes of the judicial power reside in only Article III tribunals. Id. at 77 & n. 29, 102 S.Ct. at 2874 & n. 29. As we have stated earlier, the Archivist does not exercise "judicial power" when he treats claims of executive privilege by Mr. Nixon, but rather he merely makes, as the OLC memorandum itself describes it, an "administrative decision"--concerning the public release of documents within the government's possession. Unlike the judges of the bankruptcy court in Marathon, the Archivist is not vested with the various powers of a court of equity, law, or admiralty (e.g., jury trials, habeas corpus, and issuance of writs). 458 U.S. at 54-55, 102 S.Ct. at 2862-63.

The Archivist may well not be particularly qualified by himself to evaluate former President Nixon's claims of executive privilege, but we see no reason why the incumbent President cannot ensure adequate consultation with his Justice Department--perhaps OLC--to enable the Archivist to make appropriate determinations. See 36 C.F.R. õ 1275.44(c) (Archivist may consult with other appropriate federal agencies in making his determinations regarding a claim of privilege). And the Archivist will be knowledgeable, as appellees emphasize, as to what information is already disclosed and therefore will be, if properly advised as to constitutional matters, uniquely suited to expressing the Executive Branch's determination on such claims.

Finally, our conclusion that OLC's modification of the Archivist's regulations is not constitutionally compelled is consistent with our prior opinion in Nixon v. Freeman, *1480
152
670 F.2d 346 (D.C.Cir.1982). There the fifth set of regulations was challenged in part because, like the sixth set prior to OLC's memorandum, it required former President Nixon to assume the burden of coming forward to challenge any particular disclosure that he thought would violate executive privilege. Mr. Nixon argued that the Archivist was obliged to identify and segregate material implicating the privilege to reduce the burden on the former President to examine all disclosures to determine whether he should assert a privilege. We rejected that argument, holding that Mr. Nixon must assert the privilege on a disclosure-by-disclosure basis and only after that assertion should the Archivist focus on the issue. Freeman, 670 F.2d at 359. We also rejected Mr. Nixon's claim, similar, if not identical, to the one presented here, that a requester must show a particularized need for sought documents:

Rather, we think that those who see in disclosure a threat to the privilege must be given a meaningful opportunity to contest disclosure on that basis. The regulations give Mr. Nixon such an opportunity. He can raise a challenge by sending a letter to the Administrator explaining his position; only if his claim is rejected administratively need he present his claim in court.
Freeman, 670 F.2d at 359 (emphasis added). Clearly in Freeman we saw no constitutional anomaly in the prospect of the Archivist rejecting a challenge by Mr. Nixon based on executive privilege.

III.
[3] We are thus left with the question whether the OLC (the government's) "interpretation" of the Archivist's regulation is consistent with the statute. This is an issue of law concerning which, as we have explained, we afford no deference to the government's position. As such, we conclude that it is at variance with congressional purpose and therefore reject it. Section 104(a)'s primary thrust is disclosure. Section 104(a)(5) is an exception to the statute's central purpose, but the government's construction of the regulation results in the exception looming larger than the rule. If, whenever Mr. Nixon asserts executive privilege, the Archivist in effect loses jurisdiction over his responsibilities to affect disclosure, the former President has gained power to withdraw from the Archivist some indefinite portion of the responsibilities that Congress delegated to him--and transfer those responsibilities to the Judiciary. We think that is a strained interpretation of congressional purpose, indeed one which, but for OLC's constitutional concerns, apparently would not be advanced by the government. We read the statute, as do appellees, as imposing on the Archivist the responsibility to arrange for disclosure of a category of the Nixon papers. The burden to seek disclosure is not, as is largely true of the Freedom of Information Act, 5 U.S.C. õ 552 (1982), for example, placed upon the public. Of course, as õ 104(a)(5) specifically provides, the Archivist must afford an "opportunity" to Mr. Nixon to assert his privileges, but the implication of the statute is that Mr. Nixon's assertion must be directed to that individual whom Congress entrusted with the affirmative duty to disclose. The regulations proposed by the Archivist, without OLC's modification, accomplish just that, whereas OLC's modification shifts much of the administrative responsibility to the Judiciary. We do not believe that shift reflects a correct understanding of congressional intent.
We hold, as did the district court, that the Archivist's regulations, as interpreted by the OLC memorandum, rely on an erroneous construction of the Constitution and therefore cannot be sustained. Since the government asserts in this court that the promulgation of the regulation was not conditioned upon the Justice Department's interpretation, there is no need to direct the district court to remand to the Archivist. The judgment of the district court approving the regulations as promulgated by the Archivist, without the Justice Department's modification, is therefore affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Nothing has been decided. The issue is being considered by the administrator. There is no need to decide now. The next schedule is set. And for the schedule after that, Brad said that he would switch back with you, so that you would return to where you are in the current schedule.

Please stop with the crap about the injustice to you, even if you believe it. Brett, Noel, and I have spent a lot more time there than you. Although you started going before the other newbies, you have spent a grand total of one day more out there than Rachel, Kyle, and Bradl.

Maybe we should revisit the total time served issue first suggested by Brett. Brett, Noel and I would love to have you four go there for two nights every other week for the next two months or until you catch up to us.

The Honorable Richard B. Cheney
President of the Senate
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. President:

As the result of a clerical bookkeeping error that occurred on April 15, 2001, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund ("HI Trust Fund") was under-invested by approximately $2.6 billion. When the error was discovered the week of December 17, 2001, the HI Trust Fund was immediately warranted $2.6 billion. Consequently, the principal amount of the bookkeeping error has been fully corrected. However, the under-investment in the HI Trust Fund caused it to be deprived of interest earnings.

The Administration believes that the error should be corrected in full to ensure that the HI Trust Fund has the balance and the investment holdings that it would have had if the error had not occurred. Otherwise, there would be an undeserved loss to the HI Trust Fund.

Enclosed is a draft bill designed to restore the HI Trust Fund to its correct financial position. Also enclosed is an analysis of the proposed legislation. The draft bill would direct the Secretary of the Treasury to replicate the investment holdings that the HI Trust Fund would have held if the error had not occurred, and would appropriate to the HI Trust Fund an amount equal to the difference between the amount of interest that the Treasury general fund would have paid to the HI Trust Fund if the error had not occurred and the amount that was actually paid. The Department of the Treasury would work with the Department of Health and Human Services to determine the investments to be replicated and the amounts to be appropriated.

The prompt and favorable consideration of this proposal would be appreciated. An identical letter has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection from the standpoint of the Administration's program to the submission of this proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely,

Paul H. O'Neill

Enclosures

A BILL

To restore the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund to the financial position it would have been in if a clerical bookkeeping error had not occurred, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund Restoration Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) Clerical error.—The term "clerical error" means the failure to have transferred the correct amount from the general fund to the trust fund, which failure occurred on April 15, 2001.

(2) Trust fund.—The term "trust fund" means the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

SEC. 3. CORRECTION OF TRUST FUND HOLDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL—Within 120 days after the effective date of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall take the actions described in subsection (b) with respect to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund with the goal being that, after the actions are taken, the holdings of the trust fund will replicate, to the extent practicable in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the obligations that would have been held by the trust fund if the clerical error had not occurred.

(b) OBLIGATIONS ISSUED AND REDEEMED.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall —

(1) issue to the trust fund obligations under chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, that bear issue dates, interest rates, and maturity dates as the obligations that —

(A) would have been issued to the trust fund if the clerical error had not occurred; or

(B) were issued to the trust fund and were redeemed by reason of the clerical error; and

(2) redeem from the trust fund obligations that would have been redeemed from the trust fund if the clerical error had not occurred.

SEC. 4. APPROPRIATION TO TRUST FUND.

Within 120 days after the effective date of this Act, there is hereby appropriated to the trust fund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, to be equal to the interest income lost by the trust fund through the date of credit by reason of the clerical error.

tx2880n0SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSISdate1717666796

Section 1796 provides the short title.

Section 2796 defines certain terms used in the bill.

Section 3796 restores the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (HI Trust Fund) to the financial position it would have been in if a clerical bookkeeping error had not occurred.

As a result of a bookkeeping error, the HI Trust Fund was under-invested by approximately $2.6 billion. The principal amount of the bookkeeping error has previously been fully corrected. However, the under-investment of the HI Trust Fund caused it to be deprived of interest earnings. The bill is intended to ensure that the HI Trust Fund has the correct balance and investment holdings.

Section 3 directs the Secretary of the Treasury to replicate the investment holdings that the HI Trust Fund would have held if the error had not occurred.

Section 4796 appropriates to the HI Trust Fund an amount equal to the difference between the amount of interest that the Treasury general fund would have paid to the HI Trust Fund if the error had not occurred and the amount that was actually paid.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

In its 1977 decision in Nixon v. Administrator of General Services, 433 U.S. 425 (1977), a case involving former President Nixon's records, the Supreme Court held that both current and former Presidents retain the right to assert constitutionally-based privileges over the records of a former President. In the wake of that decision, Congress, in 1978, enacted the Presidential Records Act ("PRA" or "the Act"), 44 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2207.

The PRA established that presidential records are government property, but also recognized, consistent with the Court's decision in Nixon v. Admin., that disclosure of particular records can "adversely affect" a President's (or former President's) "rights and privileges." Id. § 2206(3). Thus, Congress specifically provided that the PRA does not "limit . . . any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President." Id. § 2204(c)(2). The PRA did not establish procedures or guidelines for incumbent and former Presidents to review records subject to release and assert (or waive) any constitutional privileges.

On November 1, 2001, President Bush, acting under the PRA and his inherent constitutional authority, signed Executive Order ("EO") No. 13233 ("Bush Order") to "further implement" the PRA. The President's Order establishes timetables and procedures for incumbent and former Presidents to claim constitutional privileges with respect to presidential records otherwise subject to release under the Act. It does not purport to establish whether, or under what circumstances, a former or incumbent President should assert or waive any constitutionally-based privilege.

Less than a month after President Bush signed EO 13233, Plaintiffs filed this action against the National Archives and Record Administration ("NARA") and John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States ("Archivist"). Although neither President Bush nor any former President has asserted privilege over any records Plaintiffs seek, and although none of the Order's principal provisions has been applied to Plaintiffs, the Complaint seeks a declaratory judgment that EO 13233 is invalid on its face.

Plaintiffs also seek a mandatory injunction (or a writ of mandamus) requiring Defendants to make available approximately 68,000 pages of presidential records from the Administration of former President Reagan ("68,000 pages"). On November 29, 2001, former President Reagan, through his representative, stated he was not asserting constitutional privilege over any of the 68,000 pages. Since that time, the Executive Branch has been actively reviewing these records for release, and, as of this date, President Bush has authorized release of approximately 67,000 of the 68,000 pages. The remaining approximately 1,000 pages are under active review, and we will promptly advise the Court when that review is completed.

This action should be dismissed. Whether viewed as a problem of standing, ripeness, or mootness (or some combination of the three), Plaintiffs' claims are not justiciable. Most importantly, the only "injury" Plaintiffs allege is neither traceable to the Bush Order provisions they challenge, nor redressable against these Defendants. Plaintiffs' claims also are unripe, under either the constitutional or prudential branch of the ripeness doctrine. Their injunctive relief claim also is largely moot.

Even assuming justiciability, this action should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. While the PRA recognizes that presidential records may be subject to constitutionally-based privileges – and, indeed, states it should not be construed to "limit" such privileges – the Act does not address the mechanics for asserting and preserving privilege objections. Congress appropriately left those issues to the Executive Branch, and the Bush Order is fully consistent with the PRA, as well as Supreme Court precedent on presidential privilege.

In the end, Plaintiffs' arguments are based on a fundamental misunderstanding of the Bush Order. EO 13233 does not make records "secret." It establishes procedures by which incumbent and former Presidents can assert constitutionally-based privileges in presidential records prior to their release under the PRA. These procedures are lawful and sensible.

BACKGROUND

A. Statutory and Regulatory Framework

REV_00140003

To understand the issues raised by Plaintiffs' challenge, it is necessary to put the Bush Order into an historical framework.

1. Nixon Papers Litigation

A President's papers historically were viewed as his personal property. See Nixon v. United States, 978 F.2d 1269, 1287-96 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Congress first broke with this tradition in 1974, when, concerned that then-recently-resigned President Nixon "might destroy documents necessary to the Watergate investigation," see id. at 1271, it passed the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act ("PRMPA"). See note following 44 U.S.C. § 2111. The PRMPA transferred control of Mr. Nixon's presidential materials to the Administrator of General Services ("Administrator"), and directed the Administrator to promulgate regulations opening the materials for public access. See id. at §§ 101, 104.

Upon challenge by Mr. Nixon (and others), the Supreme Court upheld the PRMPA as facially constitutional in Nixon v. Administrator. Three of the Court's conclusions are relevant here. First, the Court rejected Mr. Nixon's broad claim that Congress could not, consistent with the separation of powers doctrine, authorize the Administrator to regulate the disposition of his presidential materials. See 433 U.S. at 441-46. The Court stressed that the materials remained in the Executive Branch, under the control of an officer appointed by, and subordinate to, the President, see id. at 441, and that the Act "facially is designed to ensure that the materials can be released only when release is not barred by some applicable privilege inherent in [the Executive Branch]." Id. at 444 (emphasis added).

Second, the Court rejected Mr. Nixon's equally broad claim that the executive privilege for presidential communications shielded his papers and tapes from Executive Branch scrutiny. See 433 U.S. at 446-55. The Court concluded that, given the important congressional purposes underlying the PRMPA, the "limited intrusion" worked by Executive Branch screening outweighed Mr. Nixon's general privilege claim. See id. at 452-54. Again, the Court noted that the PRMPA "specifically preserved" Mr. Nixon's right to assert presidential privilege to bar release of particular documents. See id. at 455.

Third, and critically, the Court reaffirmed that the executive privilege is constitutionally-based (see United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683 (1974)), and held, for the first time, that both current and former Presidents can assert constitutional privileges over presidential records of a former President. See Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 447-49. The Court did not specify the duration of a former President's privilege, although it did note that the records of the Constitutional Convention were sealed for more than thirty years. See id. at 447 n.11.

2. The Presidential Records Act of 1978

Against the backdrop of Nixon v. Administrator, Congress in 1978 began work on a bill to deal "more broadly with control of and access to Presidential papers." See Presidential Records Act of 1978, H. Rep. No. 95-1487, reprinted in 1978 U.S.C.C.A.N. 5732, 5737 ("House PRA Report"). Both Houses held hearings on draft legislation.[1]

Congress fully recognized what one legislative sponsor described as "the constitutional issues which must be dealt with by all who attempt to legislate in this area." See Senate PRA Hearing at 2 (statement of Sen. Nelson); see also House PRA Report at 5737-38. One government witness, the Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel, testified at length about privilege concerns from the Executive Branch's perspective. See, e.g., House PRA Hearings at 91, 96, 100-01, 105, 124-25 (advocating that legislation preserve a former President's ability to assert legally- or constitutionally-based rights or privileges prior to release of specific records).

The PRA, as enacted, reflects Congress's consideration of the constitutional issues.[2] Under the Act, "Presidential records" – but not "personal records" (see 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3)) – are subject to the "complete ownership, possession, and control" of the United States. See id. § 2202. The Act's provisions can be grouped in two parts: those governing presidential records during a President's term in office, and those governing presidential records after a President's term (or terms) ends. See id. §§ 2203(c)-(f).

During a President's term of office, the PRA "accords the President virtually complete control over his records." See Armstrong v. Bush, 924 F.2d 282, 290 (D.C. Cir. 1991). After a President's term (or terms) ends, the Archivist of the United States[3] assumes responsibility for the "custody, control, and preservation of, and access to" PRA-covered records. See 44 U.S.C. § 2203(f). The PRA has three principal provisions relevant to the disclosure of presidential records.

First, prior to leaving office, a President may, for up to twelve years, restrict public access to records containing any of six categories of information.[4] See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(a). These categories (which are somewhat analogous to exemptions under the Freedom of [2]See 124 Cong. Rec. 36846 (Oct. 13, 1978) (statement of Sen. Nelson) (noting Congress's desire to draft a bill "fair to all parties concerned"); 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Brademas) (legislation "strikes a reasonable balance between the public's right to have access to the work product of the Government . . . and the need to provide for a free flow of ideas within the executive branch"); 124 Cong. Rec. 36844 (Oct. 13, 1978) (statement of Sen. Percy) ("while it is crucial to protect the public interest in these papers, we must also protect the constitutional rights of the individuals involved"); see generally House PRA Report at 5737-40.

[3]In 1984, Congress transferred statutory responsibility for archival- and records-management functions from the Administrator of General Services to the Archivist, an Executive Branch official appointed, and removable, by the President. See National Archives and Records Administration Act, 44 U.S.C. §§ 2101-2118; id. § 2103(a). NARA, an Executive Branch agency, is administered "under the supervision and direction" of the Archivist. See id. § 2102.

[4]These restrictions do not apply to access requests by Congress, the courts, and the incumbent President, who may access presidential records otherwise restricted from public view "subject to any rights, defenses, or privileges which the United States or any agency or person may invoke." See 44 U.S.C. § 2205(2).

Information Act ("FOIA"), 5 U.S.C. § 552) are: classified information; see 44 U.S.C. § 2204(a)(1); information relating to appointments to federal office; id. § 2204(a)(2); information exempt from disclosure by statute (other than under FOIA or the Privacy Act); id. § 2204(a)(3); trade secret and commercial/financial information; id. § 2204(a)(4); personnel and medical information and similar information the disclosure of which would invade privacy; id. § 2204(a)(6); and, in the so-called "P5" exception, "confidential communications requesting or submitting advice, between the President and his advisers, or between such advisers."[5] Id. § 2204(a)(5). A President's decision to restrict access to a particular category of information is not judicially reviewable. See Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, 1 F.3d 1274, 1291, 1293 (D.C. Cir. 1993).

Second, five years after the Archivist obtains custody of a President's records, public access is governed by the FOIA (subject, of course, to any applicable presidentially-imposed access restrictions).[6] See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(1). Thus, as the House Report explains, presidential records are not "automatically available to the public," but, instead, requests for access are treated as FOIA requests, "subject to" FOIA's exemptions from compulsory disclosure. See House PRA Report at 5746-47; see also 5 U.S.C. § 552(b) (listing FOIA exemptions).

The one critical statutory exception to this rule is that NARA may not withhold presidential records based on FOIA exemption (b)(5). See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(1). This [5]This last category, which protects disclosure of presidential communications, deliberations, and other information subject to a common-law or constitutionally-based privilege, was the basis for restricting public access to the 68,000 pages of Reagan records during the twelve-year period after Mr. Reagan's Presidency ended. See Complaint ¶ 31.

[6]The Office of the President is exempt from the requirements of FOIA. See Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 156 (1980). The PRA deems presidential records "to be records of [NARA]." See 44 U.S.C.§ 2204(c)(1). The Archivist is required to "administer[] [presidential records] in accordance with" FOIA, id. § 2204(c)(1), on the date no later than five years after obtaining custody of the records at the end of a President's Administration. See id. § 2204(b)(2).

exemption, which overlaps to some extent with the PRA's "P5" restriction, generally protects from disclosure records subject to traditional common law privileges applicable in civil litigation (including privileges respecting presidential communications). See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5); Coastal States Gas Corp. v. Dep't of Energy, 617 F.2d 854, 862 (D.C. Cir. 1980).

Third, and finally, the PRA does not (and could not) override a former or incumbent President's assertion of constitutional privilege. Congress understood it could not compel, or otherwise provide for, release of privileged records. See House PRA Report at 5737 (noting that, under Nixon v. Admin., Congress may provide for release of presidential records "only when [release is] not barred by some applicable privilege inherent in the Executive Branch").[7] As the PRA itself states: "[n]othing in this Act shall be construed to confirm, limit, or expand any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President." 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(2).

The PRA does not establish procedures for incumbent and former Presidents to review presidential records and assert (or waive) any constitutionally-based privileges. Those issues are left to the Executive Branch. See 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) (legislation not "designed to prejudge" issues "involving the manner of assertion of the constitutional privilege").

3. Executive Order No. 13233

President Reagan's records were the first presidential records made subject to the PRA. See 44 U.S.C. § 2201 (effective date provision). President Bush took office on the date the twelve-year access restrictions imposed by Mr. Reagan expired. See Complaint ("Compl.") ¶ 27.

---

[7]See also 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) (noting that the Archivist, "if so directed," would be required to "exercise any assertion of privilege on the incumbent President's behalf"); 124 Cong. Rec. 36844 (Oct. 13, 1978) (statement of Sen. Percy) (acknowledging that Congress "cannot prevent a former or incumbent President from arguing, even after the [lapse of a presidentially-imposed restriction], that a particular confidential communication between the President and an adviser should not be released").

REV_00140008

Faced with administering the PRA, and the fact that otherwise-privileged records were now theoretically subject to release under FOIA (because FOIA exemption (b)(5) could not be claimed), the Bush Administration undertook "a thorough legal review of the PRA and consider[ed] its long-term implications on the deliberative process for the Presidency and the Executive Branch." See Compl. ¶ 36 (quoting statement of the Archivist).

As a result of this review, President Bush, on November 1, 2001, issued Executive Order 13233 to "[f]urther [i]mplement[]" the PRA. See Bush Order (title). The Order is designed to "establish policies and procedures . . . with respect to constitutionally based privileges."[8] See id. (preamble). It is "not intended to indicate whether and under what circumstances a former President should assert or waive any privilege." See id. § 9.

Five provisions of the Bush Order are relevant to Plaintiffs' claims.

Sections 3(a)-(c). These sections establish timetables for reviewing requests for access to presidential records under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). See Bush Order §§ 3(a)-(c). For example, under the Order, former Presidents have ninety days to review requested records for privilege, absent an "unduly burdensome" request. See id. § 3(b). The Order imposes no time limit on an incumbent's privilege review. See id. § 3(d).

Section 4. Section 4 confers on former Presidents the primary (but not sole) responsibility for asserting or waiving constitutional privileges with respect to their records. It provides that the incumbent, absent compelling circumstances, will "concur in the privilege decision of the former President in response to a request for [public] access." See Bush Order § 4. This means that the incumbent President presumptively will assert privilege over otherwise-

[8]Before leaving office, President Reagan also issued an Executive Order to establish procedures for current and former Presidents to assert constitutional privileges over records governed by the PRA. See Exec. Order No. 12667 ("Reagan Order"), 54 Fed. Reg. 3403 (Jan. 18, 1989), reprinted in note following 44 U.S.C. § 2204. The Bush Order revokes the Reagan Order, see Bush Order § 13, although, as explained infra p.20, one of the Reagan Order provisions is still relevant to our justiciability arguments.

REV_00140009

privileged records when the former President does so, and that he presumptively will waive privilege over otherwise-privileged records when the former President chooses to waive privilege. When the incumbent concurs in a former President's privilege assertion, he "will support that privilege claim in any forum in which the privilege claim is challenged." Id.

Section 3(d). Section 3(d) establishes that the Archivist (at the incumbent's direction) may not release records as to which either the incumbent or former President has asserted constitutional privilege, "unless and until the incumbent President advises the Archivist that the former President and the incumbent President agree to authorize access . . . or until so ordered by a final and nonappealable court order." See Bush Order § 3(d)(1). This provision is designed to accord with the Supreme Court's decision in Nixon v. Admin., which recognized that both incumbent and former Presidents can assert the privilege. See 433 U.S. at 448-49 (former President has an independent constitutional right to assert the privilege).[9]

Section 10. Section 10 provides that a former President may designate a representative to assert constitutional privileges on his behalf in the event he dies or becomes disabled. See Bush Order § 10. Absent such a designation before his death, the former President's family may designate a representative to "act on the former President's behalf for purposes of the [PRA] and this order, including with respect to the assertion of constitutionally based privileges." See id.

Section 11. Finally, Section 11 states that the Bush Order policies and procedures apply equally to "records that are subject to any constitutionally based privilege that the former Vice President may be entitled to invoke." See Bush Order § 11.[10] [9]If the former President does not assert privilege, the incumbent may either concur in the former President's assessment (in which case the Archivist is directed to "permit access to" the requested documents), see Bush Order § 3(d)(2)(i), or, if the incumbent does not concur, the incumbent may "independently order the Archivist to withhold privileged records . . . . unless and until the incumbent President advised the Archivist that the former President and the incumbent President agree to authorize access . . . or until so ordered by a final and nonappealable court order." See id. § 3(d)(2)(ii).

B. Facts As Alleged In Plaintiffs' Complaint

Plaintiffs – two historians, three historical and/or archival organizations, a press association, and a public interest group (Public Citizen, Inc., also serving as counsel) – filed this action against the Archivist and NARA on November 28, 2001, a little less than a month after President Bush signed EO 13233.

Plaintiffs' factual assertions are straightforward. President Reagan, upon leaving office, restricted access to approximately 68,000 pages of records based on 44 U.S.C. § 2204(a)(5), the PRA's "P5" exception. See Compl. ¶ 31. These restrictions, which President Reagan generally imposed for twelve years, lapsed on January 20, 2001 (although some of the restrictions were narrowed by Mr. Reagan before President Bush took office). See id. ¶¶ 26, 27.

NARA, by letters dated February 28, 2001 and June 19, 2001, notified Mr. Reagan and President Bush of its intent to disclose the 68,000 pages. See Compl. ¶ 33. President Bush, upon receiving NARA's letters, directed the Archivist to extend the time period for releasing the 68,000 pages, twice for ninety days, once "indefinite[ly]." See id. ¶¶ 36, 37. At the end of this period (and, Plaintiffs claim, having reviewed no records), the President issued EO 13233. See id. ¶¶ 37, 38, 55.

One of the historian-plaintiffs, Hugh Davis Graham, notes that, during the period of restricted access, he was denied access to Reagan presidential records on the basis of the P5 which states that the Order does not expand or limit an incumbent's right to obtain presidential records under 44 U.S.C. § 2205(2)(B); see Bush Order § 5; Section 6, which establishes procedures for reviewing judicial and congressional requests for presidential records under 44 U.S.C. § 2205; see Bush Order § 6; Section 7, which states that the Order does not limit a former or incumbent President's right to withhold records on any ground supplied by Constitution, statute, or regulation; see id. § 7; Section 8, which states that, during the 12-year period of restricted access established by 44 U.S.C. § 2204(a), a former or incumbent President may request withholding of any privileged records not already protected from disclosure under § 2204(a); see Bush Order § 8; and Section 12, which states that the Order is not intended to create any right or benefit enforceable at law by a party other than a former President or his representative. See id. § 12.

exception. See Compl. ¶¶ 29-30. Plaintiffs do not contend, however, that either President Bush or former President Reagan has claimed constitutional privilege over any of the 68,000 pages (or that they have a right to access any constitutionally-privileged records). See id. ¶ 56. Rather, Plaintiffs' claim is that, in the absence of a privilege assertion (or some applicable FOIA exemption), the 68,000 pages should be released now, whether or not President Bush and Mr. Reagan have completed their privilege review. See id. ¶¶ 54-57.

Plaintiffs assert two claims for relief. In their first count, they seek a declaration that the Bush Order is contrary to both the PRA and NARA's regulations. See Compl. ¶¶ 58-63 & p. 22. Specifically, Plaintiffs contend that the five Bush Order provisions discussed supra pp. 9-11 are unlawful. See Compl. ¶¶ 60(i)-(v) (challenging these provisions). Plaintiffs claim their challenge is reviewable under the Administrative Procedure Act ("APA"), 5 U.S.C. §§ 551, et seq., the Declaratory Judgment Act, 22 U.S.C. § 2201, and their "nonstatutory right to judicial review" of "unlawful" executive action. See Compl. ¶¶ 1, 65.

In their second count, Plaintiffs's seek a mandatory injunction, or, in the alternative, a writ of mandamus, compelling the Archivist to make the 68,000 pages "available to the public at the Reagan Presidential Library forthwith." See Compl. ¶¶ 67-75 & p. 22. According to Plaintiffs, "[b]ecause the Bush Order is unlawful and in violation of the PRA, its terms cannot be relied upon as a basis for continued withholding of the 68,000 pages." See id. ¶ 72. Plaintiffs claim this "withholding" is reviewable under the APA, the Declaratory Judgment Act, and the mandamus statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1361. See Compl. ¶ 75.

C. Additional Facts Relevant To The Court's Jurisdiction

Before turning to the merits of our motion, there are two facts relevant to the Court's jurisdiction not contained in Plaintiffs' Complaint. See Bayvue Apartments Joint Venture v. OCWEN Fed. Bank FSB, 971 F. Supp. 129, 132 n.5 (D.D.C. 1997) ("[i]n determining the presence of subject matter jurisdiction on a motion to dismiss under F.R.C.P. 12(b)(1), the court may look to material outside the complaint").

REV_00140012

First, by letter dated November 29, 2001, the representative of former President Reagan informed NARA that Mr. Reagan had no objection to release of any of the 68,000 pages. See Letter from Joanne Drake to Gary Stern (Nov. 29, 2001) (attached at Tab A).

Second, as of today's date, the Bush Administration has reviewed, and the President has authorized release of, virtually all of the 68,000 pages. By letter dated December 19, 2001, the Counsel to President Bush notified NARA that the President had determined not to assert any constitutionally-based privilege over approximately 8,000 of the 68,000 pages (the totality of records provided to and reviewed by the White House as of that date). See Letter from Alberto R. Gonzales to Gary Stern (Dec. 19, 2001) (attached at Tab B); Press Release, NARA, Previously Withheld Reagan Presidential Materials to be Released (Dec. 20, 2001) (attached at Tab C). In a second letter, dated February 8, 2002, the Counsel to the President notified NARA that President Bush had determined not to assert any constitutionally-based privilege over approximately 59,000 of the approximately 60,000 remaining pages (leaving approximately 1,000 of the total 68,000 pages left for review). See Letter from Alberto R. Gonzales to Gary Stern (Feb. 8, 2002) (attached at Tab D). The Administration "anticipate[s] prompt completion of the review of the remaining records." See id.

ARGUMENT

Our argument is in three parts. Part I demonstrates that Plaintiffs' claims are not justiciable because they lack standing and their claims are either unripe or moot. Part II demonstrates that, even assuming justiciability, the Court lacks jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' request for a mandatory injunction. Part III demonstrates that, even assuming a proper claim, Plaintiffs' challenge lacks merit because the Bush Order is fully consistent with the PRA and any applicable constitutional principles.

I. PLAINTIFFS' CLAIMS ARE NOT JUSTICIABLE.

The judicial power extends only to cases and controversies. See National Treasury

REV_00140013

Employees Union v. United States, 101 F.3d 1423, 1427 (D.C. Cir. 1996) ["NTEU"]. "In an attempt to give meaning to Article III's case-or-controversy requirement, the courts have developed a series of principles termed 'justiciability doctrines,' among which are standing, ripeness, [and] mootness." Id. (citing Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 750 (1984)).

Each of these doctrines presents an independent bar (partial, in the case of mootness, complete, in the case of standing and ripeness) to the Court's consideration of Plaintiffs' claims. Two of the doctrines – standing and ripeness – are closely interrelated on these facts and, indeed, to a degree, overlap. No matter how the Court views the justiciability issue, however, the outcome is clear: Plaintiffs' claims should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

A. Plaintiffs Lack Standing.

The party asserting jurisdiction always has the burden "'clearly to allege facts demonstrating that he is a proper party to invoke judicial resolution of the dispute.'" FW/PBS, Inc. v. City of Dallas, 493 U.S. 215, 231 (1990) (internal citation omitted). To have standing under the Constitution, Plaintiffs must allege they have suffered (or will suffer): (1) an "actual or imminent" injury-in-fact; (2) "fairly . . . trace[able] to the challenged action of the defendant"; and (3) "likely" to be "redressed by a favorable decision." See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560-61 (1992) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Plaintiffs claim they have been injured solely by the ongoing privilege review (under Section 3(c) of the Bush Order), which (they say) has "delayed" release of the 68,000 pages beyond the conclusion of the twelve-year restricted period. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 57, 63, 74 Assuming that such "delay," absent an ultimate withholding, can amount to injury,[11] the [11]While assuming this point for purposes of this motion, we do not concede it. The PRA does not purport to establish "deadlines" for constitutional-privilege review. Indeed, President Bush did not even take office until January 20, 2001, the day the twelve-year restrictions imposed by former President Reagan expired. See Compl. ¶ 27. Nothing in the PRA would – or could – have required release of the 68,000 pages on that date. Because the Constitution requires a meaningful opportunity to assert the privilege, see Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 444 n.7,

REV_00140014

Complaint should be dismissed because Plaintiffs cannot meet the second and third standing requirements.

1.Any "Injury" Is Not Traceable To The Challenged Provisions.

To satisfy traceability, a plaintiff must establish a "causal connection between the injury and the [complained of] conduct." See Lujan, 504 U.S. at 560; see also Allen, 468 U.S. at 753 n.19. All but one of the provisions Plaintiffs challenge, however, applies only upon invocation of a constitutional privilege. See Bush Order § 4 (requiring an incumbent to concur in a former President's privilege assertion absent "compelling circumstances");[12] id. § 3(d)(1) (requiring the Archivist to withhold access to requested documents upon a former President's privilege assertion); id. § 10 (authorizing a former President to designate a representative to assert constitutional privilege on his behalf); id. § 11 (stating that the Order applies equally to any assertion of constitutional privilege by an incumbent or former Vice President); see also Compl. ¶¶ 60(ii)-(v) (alleging these provisions are unlawful).[13]

Because neither President Bush nor former President Reagan has asserted privilege over any of the 68,000 pages, Plaintiffs cannot establish a "causal connection" between their alleged "injury" and these sections of the Bush Order, which have caused Plaintiffs no harm. See Lujan, absent some showing that privilege review has been unreasonably long under the circumstances (something Plaintiffs have not – and cannot – show here), it is hard to see how delay, standing alone, can constitute injury. See Claybrook v. Slater, 111 F.3d 904, 906 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (absent a duty to act, failure to act cannot constitute injury). In any event, for purposes of this motion, we rest our standing argument on Plaintiffs' failure to meet the traceability and redressability requirements.

[12]This provision also applies when a former President determines not to assert a privilege, see Bush Order § 4, but Plaintiffs presumably do not challenge it to that extent.

[13]The remaining provision Plaintiffs challenge, Section 3, establishes procedures for incumbent and former Presidents to determine whether to assert a privilege. See Bush Order §§ 3(a)-(c); Compl. ¶ 60(i) (challenging this provision). As explained below, even if Plaintiffs have been injured by this provision (through any "delay" caused by the President's ongoing privilege review under Section 3(c)), they lack standing because any "injury" is not redressable.

REV_00140015

504 U.S. at 560 (traceability requires such a connection); Allen, 468 U.S. at 753 n.19 (same). The heart of Plaintiffs' challenge (i.e., to all but Section 3(c) of the Bush Order) should, therefore, be dismissed for this reason alone.

2. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Redressable.

Even putting traceability aside, Plaintiffs lack standing because none of their claims (including their Section 3(c) challenge) is redressable. Our redressability argument has two points. The first point relates to Plaintiffs' requests for both declaratory and injunctive relief. The second point relates only to Plaintiffs' request for declaratory relief.

a. The Named Defendants Cannot Provide Plaintiffs The Relief They Seek.

Plaintiffs sued NARA and the Archivist (presumably) because they could not have brought their claims directly against the President. The Chief Executive is not subject to suit under the APA. See Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788, 796 (1992) (plurality) ("the President is not an agency within the meaning of the [APA]"). Moreover, while the Constitution does not "bar every exercise of jurisdiction over the President," see Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 731, 753-54 (1982), courts generally have "'no jurisdiction of a bill to enjoin the President in the performance of his official [as opposed to ministerial] duties.'" Franklin, 505 U.S. at 802-03 (plurality) (quoting Mississippi v. Johnson, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 475, 501 (1866)); see also id. at 826 (Scalia, J., concurring) (providing a majority). This latter principle plainly would bar a direct suit by Plaintiffs against President Bush (a suit which, in effect, would seek to direct the President not to assert a constitutional privilege over any of the documents Plaintiffs seek).

To be sure, an aggrieved party ordinarily may obtain review of presidential action indirectly, i.e., by suing the subordinate official directed to carry out an allegedly illegal presidential command. See Chamber of Commerce of the United States v. Reich, 74 F.3d 1322, 1328 (D.C. Cir. 1996). But the D.C. Circuit has noted that there may be "rare instances where the bypass [of a subordinate-officer suit] is closed, and only injunctive relief against the President himself will redress [a plaintiff's] injury." Swan v. Clinton, 100 F.3d 973, 979 (D.C. Cir. 1996). In that instance, if the underlying presidential conduct is not subject to an injunction – where, for example, the action at issue relates to the President's "official" duties – the plaintiff lacks standing.[14] See id. at 976-77; see also id. at 978 (noting that, in Reich, review of executive order did "not raise issue of whether judicial power can be brought 'to bear directly on the President'") (quoting 74 F.3d at 1331 n.4). That is the case here.

In determining whether the "bypass" is closed, Swan, 100 F.3d at 979, the critical question is whether injunctive relief against a subordinate officer alone can "substantially redress" a plaintiff's injury. See id. In Swan, a holdover appointee of the National Credit Union Administration ("NCUA") advisory board sued then-President Clinton, a presidential aide, and the NCUA's Executive Director, seeking reinstatement and removal of his presidentially-appointed successor (Wheat). See 100 F.3d at 975. Swan alleged the President's actions violated the removal provisions in the NCUA statute. See id. at 977.

Although finding the statutory "duty" ministerial (and thus potentially enforceable against the President), see 100 F.3d at 977, the court nevertheless considered whether it could redress Swan's alleged injury by enjoining a presidential subordinate.[15] See id. at 979. The court held it could provide such "de facto" relief, by ordering the other NCUA board members (added by the court as defendants) to "treat[] Swan as a member of the NCUA Board and allow[]

[14]This principle applies to requests for declaratory relief, see Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1; id. at 988 (Judge Silberman, concurring), and for "non statutory" review. See Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 474 (1994).

[15]The court noted that, even in the context of a purely ministerial act, "injunctive relief against the President personally is an extraordinary measure not lightly to be undertaken." See Swan, 100 F.3d at 978; see also Franklin, 505 U.S. at 802 (plurality) (leaving open whether the President "might be subject to a judicial injunction requiring the performance of a purely 'ministerial' duty"). The Court of Appeals also questioned whether one of its prior decisions, National Treasury Employees Union v. Nixon, 492 F.2d 587 (D.C. Cir. 1974), wherein it asserted (but did not exercise) the authority to order the President to perform a ministerial act, remained good law after Franklin. See 100 F.3d at 978.

him to exercise the privileges of that office . . . denying any such treatment to Wheat." See id. at 980 & n.3.

Here, injunctive relief solely against NARA or the Archivist (or any other subordinate official) cannot provide Plaintiffs even partial relief. In their Complaint, Plaintiffs acknowledge their request for a mandatory injunction requiring release of the 68,000 pages is really a request for release of non-privileged records, for Plaintiffs have no right, under the PRA or elsewhere, to access presidential records subject to a valid assertion of constitutional privilege.[16] Neither the Archivist nor NARA, however, can invoke the President's authority to assert constitutional privilege. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 713; 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) ("the Archivist could not, on his own authority, withhold deliberative documents for which Presidential privilege might be claimed"). Nor can they "waive" the President's privilege by releasing records before the President has determined whether any privilege should be asserted. There is, therefore, no "de facto" relief for Plaintiffs to obtain against these Defendants.

For all of these reasons, Plaintiffs' claims against NARA and the Archivist are not redressable. Moreover, because Plaintiffs cannot bring their claims directly against the President, they lack standing.

b. Declaratory Relief Will Not Alleviate Plaintiffs' "Injury."

Plaintiffs declaratory claim is not redressable for an additional reason: because they cannot show that relief is "'likely' to flow from a favorable judicial decision." See Allen, 468 U.S. at 751. As noted above, the only injury Plaintiffs' allege is "delay" in making the 68,000 pages available. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 57, 63, 74, 75. More specifically, because former [16]See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 33 ("NARA's notice [of intent to release] did not state that any of the records 'raise a substantial question of Executive privilege' within the meaning of § 2(a) of the Reagan Order"); id. ¶ 56 ("[n]o one has asserted a constitutionally based right or privilege that would preclude release of the 68,000 pages").

President Reagan's representative has determined not to assert privilege over any of these records (see Tab A), the only injury Plaintiffs allege is "delay" due to President Bush's ongoing privilege review.

If Plaintiffs prevail on their declaratory judgment claim, however, the Reagan Order will again govern the procedures for asserting constitutional privilege. Under the Reagan Order (which Plaintiffs do not challenge or otherwise take issue with), an incumbent may "instruct[]" the Archivist to delay the time for privilege review. See Reagan Order § 2(b). In fact, as Plaintiffs note in their Complaint, before issuing EO 13233, President Bush, under authority of the Reagan Order, three times directed the Archivist to extend the time period for releasing the 68,000 pages, twice for ninety days, once "indefinite[ly]." See Compl. ¶¶ 36-37. These extensions account for much of the "delay" at issue.

Thus, if Plaintiffs prevail on their declaratory judgment claim, and if President Bush has not completed review of the 68,000 pages, the President likely will, under authority of the Reagan Order, instruct the Archivist to extend, for as long as is necessary to conduct his privilege review, the time for release. Given these circumstances, Plaintiffs cannot establish that declaratory relief will have any impact on (let alone abate) their alleged injury. See Allen, 468 U.S. at 753 n.19 (to satisfy redressability prong of standing, a plaintiff must establish a "causal connection" between "the alleged injury and the judicial relief requested"); see also Mideast Sys. and China Civil Constr. Saipan Joint Venture, Inc. v. Hodel, 792 F.2d 1172, 1177 (D.C. Cir. 1986) (plaintiff could not establish standing where "the remedy would not alleviate the [17]Indeed, even if Plaintiffs could establish standing, declaratory relief would be improper because, given the President's authority to extend the time for privilege review under the Reagan Order, a declaratory judgment would serve no "useful purpose." See Public Serv. Comm'n v. Wycoff Co., Inc., 344 U.S. 237, 244 (1952) (before issuing a declaratory judgment, court should be able to see "what legal issues it is deciding, what effect its decision will have on the adversaries, and some useful purpose to be achieved in deciding them"); McCorkle v. United States, 559 F.2d 1258, 1262 (4th Cir. 1977) ("[a]n important question of public law should not be resolved by a declaratory judgment if that judgment would be futile."), cert. denied, 434 U.S.

REV_00140019

injury").[17]

B. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Ripe.

Even assuming, arguendo, that Plaintiffs can establish standing, their claims are unripe. The ripeness doctrine has both a constitutional and a prudential component. See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1427. Plaintiffs cannot establish ripeness under either aspect of the doctrine.

1. Absent A Withholding, Plaintiffs' Claims Are Not Constitutionally Ripe.

To establish constitutional ripeness, Plaintiffs must show their alleged injury is both "imminent" and "certainly impending." See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1427-28. As the Supreme Court has stated, a claim is not constitutionally ripe "if it rests upon contingent future events that may not occur as anticipated, or indeed may not occur at all." Texas v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

Even assuming Plaintiffs have been injured by any "delay" caused by Section 3(c) (but see supra n.11), their remaining claims are not constitutionally ripe because they are directed to provisions of the Bush Order that rest, for their application, upon a future event: an assertion of privilege by an incumbent or former President. See supra p. 16; see also Lujan v. National Wildlife Fed'n, 497 U.S. 871, 892-94 (1990) (ripeness is determined on a claim-by-claim basis). It is impossible, at this stage, to say when, if ever, these provisions may be invoked against these Plaintiffs. Any "injury" Plaintiffs might suffer, therefore, is neither "imminent" nor "impending." See Texas, 523 U.S. at 300 (where court has "'no idea whether or when'" an allegedly unlawful action may occur, "the issue is not fit for adjudication") (internal citation omitted); City of Williams v. Dombeck, 151 F.Supp.2d 9, 14 (D.D.C. 2001) (alleged injury not constitutionally ripe where "there is no certainty as to when Plaintiffs will suffer this injury").

2. Even If Plaintiffs' Claims Technically Meet Article III Ripeness

1011 (1978).

Requirements, The Court Should Stay Its Hand Under The Prudential Ripeness Doctrine.

Even where a plaintiff satisfies constitutional ripeness, prudential ripeness bars jurisdiction where a court otherwise would "prematurely entangl[e] [itself] in abstract disagreements." See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1431. In analyzing prudential ripeness, courts apply a two-part test, evaluating: "'[1] the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and [2] the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration.'" See id. (quoting Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149 (1967)). None of Plaintiffs' claims (including their Section 3(c) challenge) is ripe under this test.

First, Plaintiffs' claims are not fit for review because they are academic. See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1431. No Plaintiff has been affected, in any way, by the challenged provisions at the heart of this lawsuit (i.e., those triggered by an assertion of privilege). See Abbott Labs., 387 U.S. at 148-49 (prudential ripeness protects other Branches from judicial interference until the effects of their decisions are "felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties"). Nor is it clear when, if ever, Plaintiffs will be affected by a withholding. See, e.g., Toilet Goods Ass'n, Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 158, 163 (1967) (claim challenging inspection regulations unripe where Court had "no idea whether or when such an inspection will be ordered").

Second, absent an assertion of constitutional privilege, it is difficult to see how Plaintiffs will be harmed if the Court defers review. The only "harm" Plaintiffs allege is delay. But, as explained above, even if Plaintiffs prevail on their challenge, President Bush will still have authority, under the Reagan Order, to direct the Archivist to withhold access to the 68,000 pages until the Executive Branch finishes reviewing those records for constitutional privilege. See Reagan Order § 2(b). The prospect of "delay," therefore, exists independently of the Bush Order. See Winter v. California Med. Review, Inc., 900 F.2d 1322, 1325 (9th Cir. 1990) (showing of hardship requires some "nexus" between the alleged injury and the challenged action).

Moreover, any "hardship" Plaintiffs might suffer is outweighed by the institutional interests in postponing review. See State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Dole, 802 F.2d 474, 480 (D.C. Cir. 1986) ("if the interests of the court and agency in postponing review outweigh the interests of those seeking relief, settled principles of ripeness squarely call for adjudication to be postponed"), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 951 (1987). Plaintiffs' challenge ultimately implicates the "usually unspoken element of the rationale underlying the ripeness doctrine: If [a court] do[es] not decide [the issue] now, [it] may never need to." See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1431; see also City of Williams, 151 F.Supp.2d. at 16. As the D.C. Circuit has explained:

> Not only does this rationale protect the expenditure of judicial resources, but it comports with our theoretical role as the governmental branch of last resort. Article III courts should not make decisions unless they have to.

NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1431 (internal citation omitted) (emphasis added).

This Court does not "have to" reach the merits of Plaintiffs' challenges. Nor is there any reason why this Court should reach out now to decide abstract claims implicating the Executive's authority to assert constitutionally-based privileges. See NTEU, 101 F.3d at 1432 (deciding claim that "may never be ripe . . . to decide" is "at best a waste of judicial resources, and at worst a usurpation"); see also United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 567 F.2d 121, 133 (D.C. Cir. 1977) ("delay" in adjudication may be "an inherent corollary of the existence of coordinate branches"). For all of these reasons, Plaintiffs' claims are not ripe.[18] [18]Finally, we note that Plaintiffs' claim for injunctive relief is moot to the extent it seeks production of the approximately 67,000 pages made public since this action was filed. As to these documents (the overwhelming bulk of the documents Plaintiffs seek), Plaintiffs have obtained "'everything that [they] could recover . . . by a judgment . . . in [their] favor.'" See Nat'l Res. Def. Council, Inc. v. United States Nuclear Regulatory Comm'n, 680 F.2d 810, 814 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (internal quotation and citation omitted). Because the Court "can hardly order [defendants] at this point to do something that [they have] already done," see id., Plaintiffs' claim for release of these now-publicly-available records should be dismissed. Cf. Perry v. Block, 684 F.2d 121, 125 (D.C. Cir. 1982) ("however fitful or delayed the release of information under the FOIA may be, once all requested records are surrendered, federal courts have no further statutory function to perform").

---

REV_00140022

II. THE COURT LACKS JURISDICTION OVER PLAINTIFFS' REQUEST FOR A MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

Plaintiffs' request for a mandatory injunction – i.e., that the Court require Defendants to "make the 68,000 pages . . . available" (Compl. p. 22) – is essentially a request for a writ of mandamus. See Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1. Even assuming that Plaintiffs have standing to raise this claim (and that it is ripe), the Court, nevertheless, lacks jurisdiction to hear it.

To establish mandamus jurisdiction, a plaintiff must make three showings: (i) that the plaintiff has a "clear right to relief"; (2) that the defendant has a "clear duty to act"; and (3) that there is "no other adequate remedy" available. See Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1. Putting aside, for the moment, the first and third requirements,[19] the Court lacks jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' mandamus claim because Plaintiffs cannot establish that Defendants have a "clear duty" to disclose the 68,000 pages.

A court may, in its discretion, issue a writ of mandamus to compel a federal official to perform a "statutorily required ministerial duty." Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1; see also Hayakawa v. Brown, 415 U.S. 1304, 1305 (1974) (Douglas, Circuit Justice) (writ is discretionary). A court has no power, however, under the mandamus statute, to require any government official to perform a discretionary act. See Swan, 100 F.3d at 977. Generally speaking, "a duty is discretionary if it involves judgment, planning, or policy decisions." Beatty v. Washington Metro. Area Transit Auth., 860 F.2d 1117, 1127 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (internal quotation marks and emphasis omitted).

The "duty" at issue here – disclosure of the 68,000 pages under review – plainly is discretionary. The PRA imposes no duty to disclose records the incumbent President, in his [19]The requirements for stating a cause of action under the mandamus statute are the same as the requirements for establishing jurisdiction. See Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1. We show infra, Part III, in our discussion of the merits, why Plaintiffs cannot establish the first mandamus requirement (i.e., that they have "a clear right" to mandamus relief).

judgment, says are privileged. See 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) (under the PRA, "the Archivist would continue to act under the supervision of the incumbent President and would, if so directed, exercise any assertion of privilege on the incumbent President's behalf"). Nor could it: the Archivist is duty-bound, under the Constitution, to honor an incumbent President's disclosure decisions. See, e.g., Myers v. United States, 272 U.S. 52, 134 (1926) (when exercising Executive discretion, subordinate officers "must do [the President's] will").

If Defendants have no duty to disclose records asserted (by the incumbent) to be privileged, then, a fortiori, they can have no duty to disclose while the incumbent is in the process of determining whether any privilege should, in fact, be asserted. At a minimum, construing the Act to require disclosure of such unreviewed records would contravene Congress's express instruction that the PRA not be read to "limit . . . any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to . . . an incumbent." See 44 U.S.C. § 2204 (c)(2). Accordingly, because the "duty" at issue is neither "ministerial" nor "statutorily-required," see Swan, 100 F.3d at 976 n.1, the court lacks jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' mandamus request.

III. EO 13233 IS A LAWFUL EXERCISE OF PRESIDENTIAL POWER.

Notwithstanding these various jurisdictional barriers, in the event the Court determines to reach the merits of some, or all, of Plaintiffs' legal challenges, it should dismiss this action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

Plaintiffs challenge five specific provisions of the Bush Order: (i) Section 3(a) (which establishes time frames for privilege review); (ii) Section 3(d)(1) (which obliges the Archivist to accommodate a former President's privilege assertion by not releasing requested records upon an assertion of privilege); (iii) Section 4 (which provides that an incumbent will generally concur in a former President's privilege assertion); (iv) Section 10 (which establishes procedures by which a former President may designate a representative for purposes of asserting constitutional privilege); and (v) Section 11 (which establishes procedures by which a former Vice President may assert constitutional privilege). See Compl. ¶¶ 60(i)-(v). In addition, Plaintiffs allege the Bush Order is contrary to NARA's regulations, and "the proper constitutional scope of executive privilege." Id. ¶¶ 61, 62.

We show below why each of Plaintiffs' challenges lacks merit. At the outset, however, it is important to note the standard by which the Bush Order should be judged. A President's power to act "must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself." See Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952). Here, the power stems largely from the Constitution: authority to establish policies and procedures governing the assertion of constitutionally-based privileges derives from, and is a necessary corollary of, the President's Article II power to assert constitutional privilege in the first instance. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 705-07 (privilege rooted in the Constitution).

To the extent Congress has authority in this area, it has left the task of devising procedures for asserting constitutional privileges to the Executive Branch. See 124 Cong. Rec. 34895 (Oct. 10, 1978) (statement of Rep. Preyer) (PRA is not "designed to prejudge" issues "involving the manner of assertion of the constitutional privilege"); 124 Cong. Rec. 36846 (Oct. 13, 1978) (statement of Sen. Nelson) (PRA "not in any way . . . intended to impinge on whatever constitutional Presidential privilege the incumbent or the former President might assert"); 44 U.S.C. § 2206(3) (delegating to NARA authority to promulgate regulations governing notice to former Presidents "when the disclosure of particular documents may adversely affect any rights and privileges which the former President may have").

Where a President exercises not only his own powers, but those delegated (explicitly or implicitly) by Congress, his action is "supported by the strongest of presumptions and the widest latitude of judicial interpretation, and the burden of persuasion [] rest[s] heavily upon any who might attack it." Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 668 (1981) (internal quotation omitted). With these principles in mind, we turn to the specific provisions at issue.

A. Section 3(a).

Section 3(a) of the Bush Order establishes timetables for incumbent and former Presidents to review requests for access to presidential records under 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c). Plaintiffs contend these provisions violate the "PRA's command that records may not be restricted after the 12-year period expires," see Compl. ¶ 60(i), as well as the Archivist's "duty" to make presidential records public "as soon as possible." See id. Both contentions are wrong.

Section 3(a)'s procedures are straightforward. At an "appropriate time" after receiving a request, the Archivist must provide notice to the incumbent and former President, and, as "soon as practicable" thereafter, copies of any records sought for review. See Bush Order § 3(a). If the former President requests copies, he must review any records "as expeditiously as possible, and for no longer than 90 days for requests that are not unduly burdensome." See id. § 3(b). "Concurrent with or after" the former President's review, the incumbent "may also review the records in question" or utilize any other procedures to determine whether to concur in the former President's privilege assessment. See id § 3(d). The Archivist may not allow access to requested records while a President's (or former President's) review is ongoing. See id. §§ 3(b), (d).

The PRA does not "command" the Archivist to make presidential records available before the incumbent or former President can determine whether to assert a privilege. To the contrary, the Act states it should not be construed to "limit . . . any constitutionally-based privilege." See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(2). As the Supreme Court recognized in Nixon v. Administrator, the privilege would be meaningless without an ability to assert it. See 433 U.S. at 444 n.7 (PRMPA must be read to afford President Nixon "meaningful notice" of archival decisions potentially implicating constitutional or legal privileges); see also Nixon v. Freeman, 670 F.2d 346, 359 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied sub nom. Nixon v. Carmen, 459 U.S. 1035 (1982) ("those who see in disclosure a threat to the privilege must be given a meaningful opportunity to contest disclosure on that basis").[20]

REV_00140027

Indeed, President Bush did not even take office until January 20, 2001, the day the twelve-year restrictions imposed by former President Reagan expired. See Compl. ¶ 27. It should be common ground that President Bush could not have reviewed the 68,000 pages for privilege before January 20. But under Plaintiffs' theory of the PRA, the Archivist would have been required to release the 68,000 pages on that date. This is nonsensical.

Moreover, while Plaintiffs are correct that the Archivist has a duty to make presidential records available "as rapidly and completely as possible," see 44 U.S.C. § 2203(f)(1), the Archivist is required to exercise that duty "consistent with" the other provisions of the Act (not to mention the Constitution). See id. As noted above, the PRA specifically states it should not be read to "limit" any constitutionally-based privilege. See id. § 2204(c)(2). It would be squarely inconsistent with the Act, as well as the separation-of-powers doctrine, to require release of presidential records before the incumbent (or former) President has a "meaningful opportunity" for privilege review.

At bottom, the Section 3 procedures are similar to the scheme Congress generally has adopted for administering public access to presidential records – FOIA. Just as FOIA contemplates that an agency (here, NARA) should have an opportunity to conduct a page-by-page review of requested records to determine the applicability of any FOIA exemptions, see 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(a)(6)(B), (C), the Executive Order provides that a President, too, should have an adequate opportunity to conduct a page-by-page review of requested records to determine the applicability of his constitutional privileges.

B. Section 3(d)(1)(ii) and Section 4.

Section 4 of EO 13233 provides that the incumbent President, absent "compelling

---

[20]Because a President's records can be so voluminous, see, e.g., Compl. ¶ 25 (President Reagan's records included "almost 44 million pages of documents"); Freeman, 670 F.2d at 349 n.3 (President Nixon's records included approximately 42 million pages of documents), it is appropriate that any privilege review take place as records are requested and subject to release.

circumstances," will "concur in the privilege decision of the former President in response to a request for [public] access" and, if privilege is asserted by the former and incumbent President, "support that privilege claim in any forum in which the privilege claim is challenged." See Bush Order § 4. Section 3(d)(1)(ii) provides that, even absent incumbent concurrence, upon a former President's assertion of privilege, the Archivist (at the incumbent's direction) "shall not permit access" to requested records "unless and until" the incumbent and former Presidents "agree to authorize access . . . or until so ordered by a final and nonappealable court order." See Bush Order § 3(d)(1)(ii). Plaintiffs contend these provisions are inconsistent with the Archivist's duty to make presidential records available "as rapidly and completely as possible" upon expiration of the 12-year restricted-access period.[21] Not so.

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs do not appear to contend that, absent the PRA, Sections 3(d)(1)(ii) and 4 would be unconstitutional. See Compl. ¶ 60 (arguing the Bush Order "violates the PRA"). Nor could they. Former Presidents have an independent constitutional right to assert the constitutional privilege, see Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 448-49, and there are compelling reasons why an incumbent generally should defer to, accommodate, and support, a former President's assertion (and certainly no constitutional bar to the incumbent doing so).[22] See discussion infra pp. 33-34. President Bush is uniquely suited to judge these points, for he, as the incumbent, is in "the best position to assess the present and future needs of the Executive Branch." Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 449.

Thus, Plaintiffs' argument here is statutory: i.e., that Sections 4 and 3(d)(1)(ii) somehow

[21]Plaintiffs' position is set out extensively in their lawyer's recent testimony before Congress. See http://www.citizen.org/litigation/briefs/FOIAGovtSec/articles.cfm?ID=6427.

[22]To be sure, an incumbent could not support a former President's assertion of privilege in a manner inconsistent with the incumbent's own constitutional duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." See U.S. Const., Art. II, § 3, cl. 4. The Bush Order, however, specifically provides that, where "compelling circumstances" exist, the incumbent has no obligation to support (and, indeed, may choose to oppose in court) a former President's privilege assertion. See Bush Order § 4.

REV_00140029

conflict with the PRA. But the PRA does not state that an incumbent President is required to authorize release of presidential records unless he determines to assert a constitutional privilege. Rather, the Act expressly recognizes that former Presidents retain an independent right to assert the privilege. See 44 U.S.C. §§ 2204(c)(2), 2206(3). There is thus no "conflict" between the PRA and Sections 3(d)(1)(ii) and 4 of the Bush Order.

Plaintiffs' argument against these provisions rests solely on the D.C. Circuit's decision in Public Citizen v. Burke, 843 F.2d 1473, 1478 (D.C. Cir. 1988), but that case supports Defendants. Burke involved a challenge to regulations NARA issued under the PRMPA. The regulations, as written, authorized the Archivist to evaluate – in the first instance, and subject to judicial review – any privilege asserted by the former President against the release of Nixon materials. See 843 F.2d at 1476. Before the regulations were implemented, however, the OLC issued an opinion binding on the Archivist stating that he was "constitutionally compelled" (id. at 1479) to honor any assertion of executive privilege by former President Nixon, and that a requester could only challenge such an assertion in federal court. See id. at 1476-77.

The court held that the regulations, as interpreted, conflicted with the PRMPA, because they impermissibly delegated to the Judiciary the Executive Branch's statutory responsibility to evaluate, in the first instance, claims of privilege by former President Nixon. See 843 F.2d at 1479-80. The court noted that, under the PRMPA, "the Archivist must afford an 'opportunity' to Mr. Nixon to assert his privileges." See id. at 1480 (quoting PRMPA § 104(a)(5) (emphasis in original). Given the PRMPA's emphasis on "disclosure," the court held, "the implication of the statute is that Mr. Nixon's assertion must be directed to that individual whom Congress entrusted with the affirmative duty to disclose [i.e., the Archivist]." Id.

The court's opinion is noteworthy for two reasons. First, by analyzing whether OLC's interpretation was consistent with the PRMPA, see 843 F.2d at 1480, Burke necessarily concluded that OLC's interpretation was constitutionally permissible. That is, the court necessarily concluded that an incumbent may, consistent with the Constitution, give considerable deference to a former President's privilege claim, subject only to challenge by a requester in court.

Second, while the PRA, like the PRMPA, emphasizes "disclosure" (see 843 F.2d at 1480), unlike the PRMPA, it contains no provision requiring the Archivist to "afford an 'opportunity'" (id.) to a former President to "assert" any privilege against public access. Compare PRMPA § 104(a)(5) with 44 U.S.C. § 2206. Nor does the PRA contain any other provision which arguably could impose a duty on the Archivist to evaluate claims of privilege.[23]

To the contrary, the PRA states expressly that it should not be construed to "limit" any constitutionally-based privilege of an incumbent or former President. See 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(2). Obligating an incumbent President, through the Archivist, to review de novo, and take positions on, privilege assertions of a former President, while perhaps not a "constitutional anomaly," see Burke, 843 F.2d at 1480, could well have a "real world" impact on a former President's privilege. See Burke, 843 F.2d at 1478 ("[i]t may well be . . . that a former President's privilege is diminished if an incumbent President sits 'as judge' of the validity of the claim"); Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 491 (Blackmun, J., concurring in part and in the judgment) (noting that "our Nation's history reveals a number of instances where Presidential transition has not been particularly friendly or easy," and that "[o]n occasion it has been openly hostile"); Dellums v. Powell, 561 F.2d 242, 251 (D.C. Cir.) (Judge MacKinnon, concurring), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 880 (1977).

Indeed, one reason why Congress made presidential records subject to "statutory access" was "to shield the Archivist from unnecessary pressure," see PRA House Rep. at 5739, including "possible pressure from the incumbent President to release embarrassing and inappropriate material concerning a predecessor or rival." See id. at 5739-40; cf. National Archives And Records Administration Act of 1984, H. Conf. Rep. No. 98-1124, reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3894, 3895 (in creating NARA, noting that archival decisions should be "insulated from the political orientation of a particular administration").

Given Congress's apparent desire to "de-politicize" presidential-record disclosure decisions, it would be anomalous, to say the least, if the PRA were interpreted to require the incumbent to judge, in the first instance and under a de novo standard, the validity of a predecessor's privilege claim. For all of these reasons, then, Sections 3(d)(1)(ii) and 4 are fully consistent with the PRA.

C. Section 10.

Section 10 authorizes a former President to designate a representative (or group of representatives) "to act on his behalf" upon death or disability for purposes of asserting constitutionally-based privileges under the Bush Order. See Bush Order § 10. Absent such a designation, Section 10 authorizes the former President's family, upon his death or disability, to designate a representative (or group of representatives) to act on the former President's behalf. See id. Plaintiffs claim this provision – which has never been invoked – is unlawful because "the Constitution does not allow for assertion of a claim of executive privilege by someone who has not held the office of president." Compl. ¶ 60(iv). This argument is contrary to both law and history.

The Constitution does not bar a delegatee from asserting constitutional privilege on a former President's behalf. The privilege exists "'not for the benefit of the President as an individual, but for the benefit of the Republic.'" Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 449 (internal citation omitted). As the Supreme Court has explained, unless a President "'can give his advisers some assurance of confidentiality,'" he "'could not expect to receive the full and frank submissions of facts and opinions upon which effective discharge of his duties depends.'" See id. at 448-49 (internal citation omitted).

Because the privilege is tied to the office (in the constitutional sense), not the occupant, the public interest in asserting the privilege may endure beyond a President's lifetime or capacity to act. For example, an "assurance of confidentiality" would mean little if it automatically vanished upon the death of a President who died while in office. It is true, of course, that a President's constitutional privilege is "subject to erosion over time." Nixon v. Admin., 433 U.S. at 451; see also id. at 450 (noting that modern Presidents have historically deposited their papers for "eventual disclosure"). But the duration of the privilege cannot be measured by a "fixed number of years." See Freeman, 670 F.2d at 356.

Plaintiffs' argument also is inconsistent with history. Until 1955, when Congress passed the Presidential Libraries Act, 44 U.S.C. §§ 2111-2112, "the burden of preserving the records of the presidents was placed on each President and his heirs," see House PRA Hearings at 478 (Appendix 10), creating a system of "private control and access restrictions." See id. at 469-70. While presidential papers are now owned by the government, neither Congress nor the courts has ever questioned the legality of this prior practice. See, e.,g., Nixon v. United States, 978 F.2d at 1277-78 (surveying history of private ownership); House PRA Rep. at 5739 & n.12.

To take a more recent example, under regulations implementing the PRMPA, Mr. Nixon's heirs (or agents) may assert any privilege on Mr. Nixon's behalf to bar public release of his presidential materials. See 36 C.F.R. §§ 1275.42, 1275.44. Again, no court has ever suggested that these regulations are unlawful or somehow improper. See Freeman, 670 F.2d at 352 (discussing provision without comment).

Providing a means for former Presidents to delegate their authority to assert constitutionally-based privileges is thus consistent with the Constitution, history, and common sense. As with any assertion of privilege by a former President himself, the Archivist must, of course, abide by any final nonappealable court order requiring disclosure of particular presidential records asserted to be privileged by a former President's delegatee. See, e.g., Bush Order §§ 3(d)(1)(i), (ii).

D. Section 11.

The PRA applies equally to vice presidential records. See 44 U.S.C. § 2207 ("Vice-Presidential records shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter in the same manner as Presidential records"). Section 11 of the Bush Order provides that it, too, applies "with respect to any [executive records of the Vice President] that are subject to any constitutionally based privilege that the former Vice President may be entitled to invoke." Bush Order § 11(a) (emphasis added). Plaintiffs contend Section 11 is unlawful because "there is no constitutional basis for a vice presidential executive privilege." Compl. ¶ 60(v). This argument misunderstands the nature of the provision.

Section 11 does not – nor could it – "create" a constitutional privilege in the Vice President. Such a privilege is created, if at all, by the Constitution. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 703-07. Section 11 does provide procedures for Vice Presidents to assert any constitutional privilege they "may" be entitled to invoke. See Bush Order § 11. But neither it, nor any other provision of the Bush Order, speaks to whether an incumbent or former Vice President has a constitutional privilege, or, if so, whether the privilege can be invoked to preclude release of particular vice presidential records.

E. The "Proper Scope" Of Constitutional Privilege.

> The preamble to the Bush Order states it is intended to establish policies and procedures . . . with respect to constitutionally based privileges, including those that apply to Presidential records reflecting military, diplomatic, or national security secrets, Presidential communications, legal advice, legal work, or the deliberative processes of the President and the President's advisors, and to do so in a manner consistent with the Supreme Court's decision in [Nixon v. Admin.].

Plaintiffs contend this provision is "contrary to[] the proper constitutional scope of executive privilege" (Compl. ¶ 62) because it includes "not only the privilege for confidential communications between the president and his close advisers, but also the common-law

attorney-

client and work-product privileges, the deliberative process privilege, and the state secrets privilege." Id. ¶ 40.

This argument is wrong for two reasons. Most importantly, as explained above, the Bush Order does not – and could not – "expand" the constitutional privilege beyond its scope. The scope of the privilege is determined by the Constitution. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 703-07.

Moreover, the notion that the constitutional privilege may, in appropriate circumstances, embrace traditional common-law privileges – such as the attorney-client, attorney work-product, or executive "deliberative process" privileges – is not remarkable. See Nixon v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. at 753 ("while courts generally have looked to the common law to determine the scope of an official's evidentiary privilege, we have recognized that the Presidential privilege is 'rooted in the separation of powers under the Constitution'") (quoting United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 708); 10 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 68, 78-79 (1986) (stating long-standing Executive Branch view that a President's constitutional privilege may "subsume" otherwise common-law privileges); 6 Op. Off. Legal Counsel 481, 494 n.24 (1982) (same); see also In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 737 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (noting that "[s]ome aspects" of the common-law deliberative process privilege "have roots in the constitutional separation of powers"); cf. In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263, 1271 (D.C. Cir.) (appearing to recognize that a communication may implicate both constitutional and common-law privileges), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 996 (1998).

There is no rule (nor could there be) that the constitutional privilege necessarily excludes attorney-client, work-product, or deliberative communications. Rather, in determining whether these types of communications fall within the scope of the constitutional privilege, ordinary considerations – involving separation of powers and effective performance of constitutional duties – apply. See, e.g., 10 Op. Off. Legal Counsel at 78-79.

F. NARA's Regulations.

REV_00140035

Plaintiffs' suggestion that EO 13233 should be declared unlawful because it allegedly is inconsistent with NARA's regulations (see Compl. ¶ 61) misunderstands the nature of the President's position in the Executive Branch. The President directs the actions of subordinate Executive Branch officers like the Archivist in the performance of their statutory duties, not the other way around. See, e.g., Myers, 272 U.S. at 134-35; Burke, 843 F.2d at 1478. Given that EO 13233 is a lawful exercise of presidential authority, it necessarily supersedes any inconsistent regulations of NARA. See Carlisle Tire and Rubber Co. v. United States Customs Serv., 663 F.2d 210, 217-18 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (refusing to accept the "notion that a regulation of a cabinet department can serve to override a direct Executive Order of the President"). NARA, of course, may be required to amend its regulations to conform to the Bush Order, but that presents no constitutional problem. See Myers, 272 U.S. at 134-35. [24]

[24]Finally, Plaintiffs contend the Bush Order is unlawful because it allegedly requires requesters to establish a "'demonstrated, specific need'" in order to request specific presidential records. See Compl. ¶ 41. This is wrong. The portion of the Bush Order Plaintiffs cite merely notes, in a background section, that courts have required a showing of "need" to overcome a constitutional privilege. See Bush Order § 2(c). Nothing in the Bush Order suggests that a requester must make a showing of need merely to request a presidential record. Under the PRA, requests for presidential records are governed by the FOIA, see 44 U.S.C. § 2204(c)(1), which has no "need" requirement. The Bush Order does not change this procedure.

REV_00140036

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, this case should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction, or, in the alternative, on the merits for failure to state a claim.

STATEMENT OF
WILLIAM F. WASLEY
DIRECTOR, LAW ENFORCEMENT AND INVESTIGATIONS (LEI)
FOREST SERVICE
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Concerning
Eco-Terrorism and Lawlessness on National Forests

Before the SUBCOMMITTEE ON FORESTS AND FOREST HEALTH COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

February 12, 2002

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE:

My name is Bill Wasley, and I am the Director of the Forest Service Law Enforcement and Investigations (LEI) program. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today to discuss eco-terrorism acts on Forest Service facilities and how the Agency is addressing employee safety.

The Forest Service manages approximately 192 million acres of land in the United States. Protecting people and natural resources is part of our mission. This mission has become more difficult over the years as crimes occurring on national forests and to federal property have increased, especially acts of eco-terrorism on research projects and government facilities. LEI is responsible for protecting and serving the public and agency employees; protecting natural resources and other property under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service; and cooperating with other law enforcement agencies.

Incidents of Ecoterrorism

Over the past 10 years, destructive civil disobedience and acts of eco-terrorism have increased, damaging resources and placing people in harm's way. Destructive criminal acts have primarily been related to protests against commercial logging activity on National Forest System (NFS) lands. These acts have included the illegal occupation of NFS lands and roads that place protestors at great risk; spiking trees designated for cutting; damaging or destroying natural resources, public roads, and facilities; damaging private property; and threatening and interfering with timber sale purchasers and timber operators. Since 1998, the Earth Liberation Front (ELF) has claimed responsibility for at least five terrorist acts to Forest Service resources, facilities, or vehicles.

Forest Service research programs have also been the targets of recent criminal acts. The Agency has an extensive research and development program that conducts basic and applied research on an array of subjects that complement the diverse mission of the Agency, including research on biological pathogens or forest genetics. In FY 2000, two acts of vandalism resulted in damages to the Forest Service Research facilities in Minnesota and Wisconsin, estimated at over $1.3 million. Over 850 pine and broadleaf trees, and saplings from "superior" tree stock and cross-pollination research were cut down, ring-barked and trampled. ELF claimed responsibility for this act. In November of 2001, two explosive arson devices were planted near university and Forest Service research buildings at Michigan Technical University, but fortunately were located by security personnel prior to detonation. No one has yet been charged with this crime.

Prevention is critical to the Agency's action plan against criminal acts of eco-terrorism. Currently, the Forest Service is conducting facility security assessments to identify those facilities that are vulnerable to terrorist acts. These assessments will address employee, facility, asset, transportation, special use permitting, and resource protection concerns.

Safety in the Workplace

Forest Service employees have been the targets of increasing domestic terrorism threats and attacks since the mid 1990's. Examples of these attacks include the bombing of an employee's residence and the complete destruction by arson of two Forest Service offices. These attacks have raised fears and concern among Agency employees for their personal safety. The Agency is addressing these concerns by securing government facilities; producing and distributing safety pamphlets, brochures, and videos; holding safety meetings; providing information to employees on steps that are being implemented to improve employee security; and providing violence awareness training. The Forest Service has an agreement with the Office of Inspector General (OIG) regarding investigations dealing with employee safety. The safety of Agency employees and the public is one of the highest priorities for the Forest Service.

Efforts to Ensure Coordinated Security

In cases of domestic terrorism the FBI has primary jurisdiction. LEI assist the FBI by serving on the joint task force investigating domestic terrorism acts.

REV_00140054

Agency law enforcement officers and criminal investigators coordinate closely with line and staff officers to provide and implement security procedures for Forest Service facilities, resources, employees, and the public. Security measures undertaken by LEI include: conducting intelligence gathering and threat assessments; providing personnel and facility security details during protests or high risk events, providing first responders to incidents; responding to protest and civil disobedience activities; investigating criminal acts; conducting search and rescues; responding to shooting incidents and drug and alcohol possession and use problems; and responding and investigating all reported instances of intimidation, threat, or assault against agency employees.

In investigating criminal acts, LEI has developed many cooperative agreements with other Federal, State, and local agencies for performance of routine law enforcement patrols, drug enforcement, timber theft investigations, and coordination of other enforcement activities. LEI participate in many task forces, particularly the FBI's counterterrorism taskforce mentioned above and the Office of National Drug Control Policy's (ONDCP) High Intensity Drug Trafficking Area (HIDTA) program.

Conclusion

The Forest Service is committed to work with the FBI to combat acts of domestic terrorism. We also are committed to ensuring safety and security of the public and our employees. The job is immense, but we will continue to work at providing these services and expend resources consistent with this priority.

REV_00140055

This concludes my statement, I would be happy to answer any questions you or Members of the Subcommittee might have.

The Free Congress Commentary
Dismantling Democracy through Judicial Activism
By Tom Jipping

While Senate Democrats are blocking President Bush???s judicial appointments, guess who???s minding the judicial store and guess what are they up to?

Liberal activist Clinton judges, that???s who, and they are up to no good.

Out on the left coast, for example, more than 70% of the full-time judges on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit are Democrat appointees.
Two of President Clinton???s 14 appointees to that court are among his most radical ever and they are busy dismantling what the people of California have spent years building.

In 1994, nearly 72% of California voters decided no longer to treat perpetual criminals as if they were first-time offenders. Instead, each additional felony would be treated more seriously. They enacted the ???Three Strikes??? law requiring that a third serious or violent felony would bring at least 25 years behind bars.

Last November, Judge Richard Paez ruled that using this law to do exactly as Californians intended violates the Constitution???s ban on cruel and unusual punishment. He insisted that the sentence was ???grossly disproportionate??? to the crime, a standard urged by only three Supreme Court Justices concurring in a 1991 case. But hey, it was all an activist needed to get where he wanted to go.

Well, now fellow Clinton appointee Judge Marsha Berzon has done the same thing in two cases. Earnest Bray had in the 1980s been convicted of four counts of robbery. In one incident, a co-defendant threatened to kill the woman they were robbing, and actually fired three shots. In another robbery, his co-defendants punched and kicked their victim.

Had he not chosen this criminal path, prosecutors could have charged him with petty theft when Bray stole several videotapes in March 1994.
Instead, they charged him with felony petty theft ???with a prior.??? Conviction of this felony became his third strike when added to his earlier robbery convictions. He received the mandatory minimum of 25 years in prison.

Richard Brown had in the 1970s and 80s been convicted of at least five serious or violent felonies including second degree murder, assault with a deadly weapon, and robbery. He also had a string of other convictions for felony vehicle theft, burglary, battery, second-degree robbery, and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Brown???s life of crime had similar consequences for him. When caught for shoplifting in 1995, prosecutors charged him with petty theft with a prior.
With three felony strikes, he too received the mandatory minimum of 25 years in prison.

Joined by liberal activist extraordinaire Judge Stephen Reinhardt and fellow
Clinton appointee Judge A. Wallace Tashima, Judge Berzon did the same thing her colleague Judge Paez had done last fall. Going to prison for 25 years for petty theft or shoplifting would, by itself, strike most people as a little much ??? or, in legalese, ???grossly disproportionate. Since neither of these career criminals had received that sentence for that crime, however, she had her work cut out for her.

Judge Berzon repeatedly said that petty theft itself, what she called the ???core conduct??? of the crime for which Bray was convicted, ???is ordinarily punished by no more than six months in jail.??? Indeed it is, but Bray had chosen to commit other crimes. He chose the serious of crimes that resulted in his conviction for petty theft ???with a prior.??? That ???with a prior??? part is what takes him outside the ordinary realm of first-time offenders receiving slaps on the wrist.

Only by re-framing the facts in this case, by acting as if this were a first-timer rather than a habitual felon, could Judge Berzon get where she wanted to go. She???s a true activist judge, making things up and moving things around to achieve the result she wants to reach. Like the case last year before Judge Paez, these were brought by law professor Erwin Chemerinsky, a dedicated leftist crusader willing to use the courts to thwart the democratic choices of his fellow citizens. Activist lawyers and activist judges are a potent combination, and here they are dismantling democracy itself and putting the safety of law-abiding citizens at risk.

This is the judicial legacy of Bill Clinton. With more than 100 judicial vacancies and more than 50 Bush nominees languishing in the Democratic Senate, these Clinton activists are striking at will. They are continuing the revolution, substituting their values and political agenda for those of the people.

The Free Congress Guest Commentary
MEHPA Spells Trouble
By Sue A. Blevins, M.P.H.

Editor???s Note: Free Congress Foundation president Paul M. Weyrich in his 11/19/01 commentary, ???Another Conservative Gone Native,??? warned NNN readers about the threat that the proposed Model State Emergency Health Powers Act poses to our civil liberties. More and more conservatives and other advocates of privacy are starting to realize that their state legislators are trying to have MEHPA become law in their state despite having given no serious thought to its consequences. Recently, Maryland State Senator Andrew Harris of Baltimore County remarked about his state???s own version of the model bill: ???As I read it, why couldn???t the governor declare [a catastrophic emergency] for tobacco smoke???? While MEHPA???s proponents dispute that claim, the fact is that history is littered with examples of how laws with such vague language are placed on the books for one reason (ostensibly good) only to be used for another, often damaging our privacy and civil liberties. MEHPA is a model bill full of bad consequences just waiting to happen. Sue A. Blevins, M.P.H., founder and president of the Institute for Health Freedom, explains why she mistrusts MEHPA in the commentary below.

State legislatures should give serious thought to how the Model State Emergency Health Powers Act could severely infringe on the precious individual liberties that are the hallmark of our nation and its states. Everyone would agree that our federal and state governments should be defending citizens against bioterrorism. But if you examine the model bill closely, it goes much, much further than necessary to perform that important and legitimate government function.

There are two major concerns.

First: The model bill would force individuals to accept vaccines and other treatments that they might oppose for various reasons. We are often told how important vaccines are for preventing various diseases. It???s true that from a public-health point of view, the best way to protect all citizens - without infringing on a minority group???s freedom of conscience - is to have an adequate supply of safe and effective vaccines for those who want them.

Then anyone who is vaccinated with the vaccines should be protected against the relevant disease. Unvaccinated people (those who reject vaccines for whatever reasons) will pose no harm to those who have been vaccinated with effective vaccines.

Second: Concerned citizens need to read their state???s MEHPA bills very closely. It is all too likely that MEHPA will infringe on the freedom of conscience of doctors and other health-care providers. Maryland???s draft of the MEHPA stated: ???If a health care practitioner fails to comply with an order, regulation, or directive???the secretary may request the appropriate licensing board to take disciplinary action against the health care practitioner?????? Maryland's version of MEHPA said it would impose fines up to $10,000 for each offense. This provision could force a doctor opposed to abortion to administer vaccines made from fetal tissue. It would force doctors to perform other services that he or she might strongly object to.
It absolutely infringes on his or her freedom of conscience - a fundamental freedom in this country.

The coercive provisions of the Model State Emergency Health Powers Act are sound reasons why the state legislatures should find a better way to defend against bioterrorism while protecting our individual freedom - the very freedom that the current war on terror is being waged to defend.

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

Draft February 12,. 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to your letter, dated February 12, 2002, regarding the Committee's hearing on February 14, 2002, which will include testimony from Judge Edward Harrington. Judge Harrington was an Assistant United States Attorney in 1967 when he prepared a memorandum, which we have identified as one of those responsive to the Committee's subpoena of September 6, 2001.

With respect to the Boston matter, as Judge Gonzalez indicated in his January 10 letter, these are unusual circumstances where the Executive Branch has filed criminal charges alleging corruption in the FBI investigative process. Further, we appreciate the Committee's interest, as articulated in your letter, in learning what information Judge Harrington knew about the Deegan matter, including the evidence and the reliability of witnesses. Based upon your February 12 letter and other Committee correspondence, we agree that the Committee has demonstrated a particular and critical need for access to this document and we are prepared to meet with you and contemporaneously make it available for your review at your earliest convenience and in advance of the hearing.

We believe that this accommodation is consistent with the President's guidance in asserting Executive Privilege. We also hope that when we meet to make this document available for review, you also will permit us to describe other Boston documents. Such a conversation may include additional exchanges of information about the documents and the Committee's information needs that may be helpful to your oversight efforts.

I am advised that there are modest redactions in the Harrington memorandum relating to Rule 6(e) and our law enforcement responsibilities. We will be in touch to discuss a convenient time for your review of this document.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant

Assistant Attorney General

Judge Gonzales has now reviewed, but he has asked that Nick Calio also review it, which may delay the sending of this until tomorrow. (Carl: Can you please circulate ASAP a new draft with the following changes made to the extent you deem them appropriate, and I will then get it to Nick and Judge.)
1. Change "you have" to "The Committee has" at beginning of second paragraph.
2. Change second sentence of second paragraph to "Consistent with long-standing constitutional principles and Department of Justice practices, the President asserted executive privilege as to those documents. The President also directed that the Department work with the Committee to continue to accommodate the Committee's information needs to the extent appropriate and consistent with the constitutional separation of powers."
3. Add to beginning of third paragraph: "Since the President's assertion of privilege, we are pleased that the Committee has focused on only one of the four categories of subpoenaed documents: the Boston documents."
4. Gonzales has an "s" not a "z" at end.
5. Add "and other information provided by the Committee" after "other Committee correspondence" in para. 3.
6. Change "has demonstrated" to "had not previously but has now demonstrated"
7. Delete "at your earliest convenience and" at end of para. 3.
8. Change the "we also hope" sentence to "In addition, we have previously offered to provide the Committee an oral briefing as to the other Boston documents, and we reiterate that offer here."
9. Delete the "Such a conversation" sentence.
10. Add "legally mandated" before "redactions."
11. Cc the whole Committee?

U.S. Department of Justice

Office of Legislative Affairs

Office of the Assistant Attorney General

Washington, D.C. 20530

Draft February 12, 2002

The Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This responds to your letter, dated February 12, 2002, regarding the Committee's hearing on February 14, 2002, which will include testimony from Judge Edward Harrington. Judge Harrington was an Assistant United States Attorney in 1967 when he prepared a memorandum, which we have identified as one of those responsive to the Committee's subpoena of September 6, 2001.

Your have subpoenaed four categories of Department of Justice prosecutorial documents: those relating to (i) the potential appointment of a special counsel for the campaign financing investigation; (ii) the investigation of Mark Middleton; (iii) the investigation of Ernest Howard; and, (iv) the investigation of certain individuals investigated and prosecuted by the Boston United States Attorney's Office (i.e. the Boston matter). While the President invoked executive privilege concerning these documents, he directed the Department to work informally with the Committee to provide such information as it can.

With respect to the Boston matter, as Judge Gonzalez indicated in his January 10 letter, these are unusual circumstances where the Executive Branch has filed criminal charges alleging corruption in the FBI investigative process. Further, we appreciate the Committee's interest, as articulated in your letter, in learning what information Judge Harrington knew about the Deegan matter, including the evidence and the reliability of witnesses. Based upon your February 12 letter and other Committee correspondence, we agree that the Committee has demonstrated a particular and critical need for access to this document and we are prepared to meet with you and contemporaneously make it available for your review at your earliest convenience and in advance of the hearing. Please note that much of the relevant underlying factual information contained in this memorandum has already been provided to the Committee pursuant to its previous document requests.

This accommodation is consistent with the President's guidance in asserting executive privilege. We also hope that when we meet to make this document available for review, we can use the occasion to schedule a further discussion about the other Boston documents. Such a conversation may include additional exchanges of information about the documents and the Committee's information needs that may be helpful to your investigative efforts.

I am advised that there are redactions in the Harrington memorandum relating to Rule 6(e). We will be in touch to discuss a convenient time for your review of this document.

Sincerely,

Daniel J. Bryant
Assistant Attorney General

Brett, after you've had a chance to review the documents, we all should probably have a meeting to discuss any documents (if any) that may actually be candidates for privilege. What's your schedule like for this? Our timing would be influenced by when the next brief is due; ideally, we'd like to be able to report that the review is done. Chad, what's the date for the next brief? Thanks.

Burton's staff just called, they asked that unless we hear back from them (after they've discussed our letter with the Chairman I presume) we bring it up at 4:30 PM today for their review. Unless someone disagrees, I'll plan to do that alone so Faith and Matt can participate in Jay's prep session.

hey there! may I stop by to get the blue sheet I dropped off last night?
I've already had two emails today about this laptop...ugh.

also, (yes, it's time for me to bug you again...) any chance I could get those trip summaries by late tomorrow morning? I am leaving the office at noon tomorrow and won't be back until Wednesday. I am just trying to keep the OA folks from having a meltdown while I am away. If you can pull it off, there's a reward in it for you...more blue sheets!!!!! Now there's incentive for you...

Thanks!!!

Pickering Judiciary Chances Dim

By Paul Kane

Despite increasing threats of retaliation from Republicans, Senate Democrats have dug in their heels to fight a controversial judicial nomination that has further poisoned the already strained relations between the two sides.

Resistance to U.S. District Judge Charles Pickering's elevation to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals has only grown among Democrats on the Judiciary Committee since his unusual second hearing last week, according to interviews with activists, aides and Senators.

With a one-vote edge on the panel, the 10 Judiciary Democrats have the power to sink the Pickering nomination, which has become a top priority for Minority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.), a close Pickering friend for 30 years.

Written follow-up questions to the Mississippi judge are due to be sent off today, but one Judiciary Democrat said his side is "ready to vote" and doesn't need any more information.

Asked if Pickering could do more to help his cause, Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) said, "Idon't think so. ... He had ample opportunity to express himself."

Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-Wash.), expressing concerns about his rulings on privacy, said she is "not likely" to vote for Pickering.

Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.) said he had grave concerns about Pickering's efforts to round up letters of support from home-state interests, questioning whether it was improper because some of those same people may have cases before his federal court.

And Sen. Joseph Biden (D-Del.) said he was not certain of Pickering's "veracity" in responding to questions posed by Sen. John Edwards (D-N.C.) about a 1994 case in which the judge contacted Justice Department officials about sentencing.

Although no Democrat would officially declare Pickering's nomination dead, aides and Senators privately said it was unlikely Pickering would receive the single Democratic vote he needs to get out of committee. That sentiment was backed up by Majority Leader Thomas Daschle's (D-S.D.) decision to take the unusual step of announcing his opposition to Pickering in two nationally televised interviews Sunday and Monday before Judiciary had rendered its verdict.

GOP sources said Lott is personally incensed about the opposition to Pickering, which has been laced with racially tinged allegations regarding Mississippi's civil rights era. Lott is particularly irate at Daschle for taking such a public stance against his home-state friend.

"Senate Democrats haven't really thought through the consequences of opposing this nominee. This is a political boomerang that's going to come back at them very hard," said one senior GOP aide.

Lott has declined to spell out what retribution he will mete out for knocking down Pickering's appellate court bid, but he's made clear he will seek revenge. "It certainly will not be a positive thing for relations around here," he said this week.

Another senior GOP aide said Republicans have grown so irate over Pickering's treatment and the perceived lack of response from Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) to take up more circuit court nominees that many Senators want to shut down all legislative activity on the floor.

"There has been serious talk of just shutting down the whole damn Senate for however long it takes," the aide said.

Republican Policy Committee Chairman Larry Craig (Idaho) said that Democrats, at the behest of left-wing interest groups, have acted in a "strident, openly partisan" manner that will result in a shot back at them. "That's a game played that does have repercussions in the end," he said, predicting that Pickering's defeat could lead to "the inability of the Senate to function."

"You have to operate with 60-plus votes,"he said, an indirect threat to block any moves to legislation on the Senate floor, which requires at least 60 votes. Last fall, in an attempt to confirm more GOP-nominated judges, Republicans blocked all appropriations bills for several weeks.

Unbowed by the threats, Democrats are ready for the fights. "We'll be reminding them that this is better treatment than many Democratic nominees who never got a hearing, who never got a vote," said one Democratic aide.

Echoing statements by Leahy and Daschle, Durbin said that Democrats have every intention of holding hearings and votes on controversial nominees. They will not take a "death-through-inaction" approach to nominees, he said, something Democrats accused Senate Republicans of doing with Clinton administration nominees in the 1990s.

If all 10 Judiciary Democrats oppose a nominee, Durbin said the message will be sent to the White House and the nominee, giving him or her the chance to back out before actually being rejected. "We should make every effort to be sensitive to the nominees. If we are not going to support them, then they should be given every opportunity to make a final decision," he said.

Republicans are particularly bitter about a potential committee defeat on Pickering, and any future judicial battles, because they know they can win a floor vote on the Mississippi judge. They expect to hold all 49 of their votes, and at least two Senate Democrats, Zell Miller (Ga.) and Fritz Hollings (S.C.), are willing to vote for Pickering if his nomination ever gets out of Judiciary and onto the floor.

Miller said his main standard for a judge would be if the two home-state Senators support the nominee, which in this case both Lott and Sen. Thad Cochran (R-Miss.) do.

Hollings, meanwhile, noted that the most salacious charges concern the judge's activities in the 1960s. "Iknow all of these charges they bring up, but I'll still vote for him. They haven't brought up anything recent. On the contrary, Ithink he's a fine judge," he said.

Hollings dismissed allegations that Pickering had ties to segregationists in Mississippi in the civil rights era and suggested that a high standard such as that might disqualify a few people from serving in the Senate.

"We've got leaders in the Senate that used to be members of the Klan," Hollings said, an apparent shot at Appropriations Chairman Robert Byrd's (D-W.Va.) past membership in the Ku Klux Klan more than 50 years ago.

Republicans are particularly concerned about what a potential defeat in committee for Pickering will mean for future appellate court nominees, such as Miguel Estrada and Jeffrey Sutton, who are younger, more ideologically conservative and potential Supreme Court nominees in the future.

All 10 Judiciary Democrats fall within the liberal wing of the party on social issues. At least three - Biden, Edwards and Feingold - are considering presidential bids and would need the support of interest groups such as the NAACP and the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, both of which oppose Pickering.

Biden said he was surprised to receive calls from his friends to put in good words for Pickering, who has been supported by Dicky Scruggs, the nation's leading anti-tobacco trial lawyer (and Lott's brother-in-law), and Charles Evers, the brother of slain civil rights activist Medgar Evers, among others.

"A lot of people Irespect - people that aren't in politics - have called to say this guy's a good guy. Istill have an open mind on this," Biden said.

But Republicans are taking a believe-it-when-we-see-it approach, doubtful that any Democrat will cross the key liberal constituencies opposed to Pickering.

"Unless there's going to be some Democrat that's going to look beyond the rhetoric that's being put out by the civil rights lobby, it's going to be pretty tough to get [Pickering] out of committee," said Sen. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa), a senior Judiciary member.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Mr. Speaker:

Transmitted herewith for referral to the appropriate committee is a draft bill "to amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise certain prospectus submission thresholds, and for other purposes".

This draft bill proposes to raise the dollar thresholds above which the General Services Administration (GSA) and other Federal agencies would have to submit prospectuses to the Public Works Committees. By raising the thresholds, Congress can greatly reduce the number of prospectuses GSA and others have to submit for Congressional review before constructing, altering, leasing or repairing public buildings and leased space.

Reducing the number of prospectus reports that must be prepared, and which must be reviewed and approved by the Committees, will reduce prospectus preparation costs and speed up needed construction, alteration and leasing actions, and provide added flexibility in GSA's space acquisition and capital planning programs. Reducing the number of prospectuses that must be reviewed by the Committees will free up limited Committee resources and staff to concentrate on those larger construction, alteration, or leasing projects that might be of interest to the Committees or which have the most significant impact on agency programs and budgets.

We note that raising the thresholds does not preclude the Public Works Committees from requesting that a Federal agency submit prospectus information for a project below the prospectus level if the Committee feels that information would be useful for its oversight responsibilities. Likewise, while Congress would still be free to enact line item appropriations for specific projects below the prospectus threshold amounts, there would be fewer instances where GSA would need to submit, and authorizing and appropriating Committees would need to review and approve, formal reprogramming/transfer requests or project escalation requests.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the perspective of the Administration's program, there is no objection to the submission of this proposed bill.

Sincerely,

Stephen A. Perry
Administrator

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

A BILL

To amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise certain prospectus submission thresholds, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. The Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended (40 U.S.C. § 601 et seq.), is amended as follows –

(a) in subsection 4(b) (40 U.S.C. §603(b)) by striking "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(b)(1) in subsection 7(a) (40 U.S.C. §606(a)) by striking "$1,500,000" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000";

(2) by striking "$1,500,000" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(3) by striking "$750,000" in the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500,000".

107TH CONGRESS
2nd SESSION

H. R. _____

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

A BILL

To amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise certain prospectus submission thresholds, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. The Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended (40 U.S.C. § 601 et seq.), is amended as follows –

(a) in subsection 4(b) (40 U.S.C. §603(b)) by striking "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(b)(1) in subsection 7(a) (40 U.S.C. §606(a)) by striking "$1,500,000" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000";

(2) by striking "$1,500,000" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(3) by striking "$750,000" in the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500,000".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1(a) of the bill would amend section 4(b) of the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise from $1.5 million (as adjusted by a composite index of construction costs) to $5 million (as similarly adjusted) the threshold under which GSA could alter a public building without seeking Committee approval.

Subsection 1(b) of the bill would amend section 7(a) of the Act to raise, from the current threshold of $1.5 million (as adjusted by a composite index of construction costs) to $5 million (as adjusted), the thresholds for public building construction, alteration, or acquisition projects. Congress would no longer be barred from appropriating funds for public building construction, alteration or acquisition projects over $1.5 (as adjusted) without first obtaining formal resolutions of approval from the House and Senate Public Works Committees. Such approval resolutions would still be required for new constructions projects, building alterations, or acquisitions over $5 million (as adjusted).

Similarly, subsection 1(b)(2) would raise from $1.5 million to $5 million (as adjusted) the threshold for lease acquisitions requiring Committee approval.

Subsection 1(b)(3) raises from $750,000 to $2.5 million (as adjusted) the Committee approval threshold for projects involving paying for alterations to leased property.

Dear Mr. Speaker:

To amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise certain prospectus submission thresholds, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. The Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended (40 U.S.C. § 601 et seq.), is amended as follows –

(a) in subsection 4(b) (40 U.S.C. §603(b)) by striking "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(b)(1) in subsection 7(a) (40 U.S.C. §606(a)) by striking "$1,500,000" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000";

(2) by striking "$1,500,000" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

107TH CONGRESS
2nd SESSION

H. R. _____

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

A BILL

To amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise certain prospectus submission thresholds, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. The Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended (40 U.S.C. § 601 et seq.), is amended as follows –

(a) in subsection 4(b) (40 U.S.C. §603(b)) by striking "$1,500,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(b)(1) in subsection 7(a) (40 U.S.C. §606(a)) by striking "$1,500,000" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000";

(2) by striking "$1,500,000" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,000,000"; and

(3) by striking "$750,000" in the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500,000".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1(a) of the bill would amend section 4(b) of the Public Buildings Act of 1959, as amended, to raise from $1.5 million (as adjusted by a composite index of construction costs) to $5 million (as similarly adjusted) the threshold under which GSA could alter a public building without seeking Committee approval.

Subsection 1(b) of the bill would amend section 7(a) of the Act to raise, from the current threshold of $1.5 million (as adjusted by a composite index of construction costs) to $5 million (as adjusted), the thresholds for public building construction, alteration, or acquisition projects. Congress would no longer be barred from appropriating funds for public building construction, alteration or acquisition projects over $1.5 (as adjusted) without first obtaining formal resolutions of approval from the House and Senate Public Works Committees. Such approval resolutions would still be required for new constructions projects, building alterations, or acquisitions over $5 million (as adjusted).

Similarly, subsection 1(b)(2) would raise from $1.5 million to $5 million (as adjusted) the threshold for lease acquisitions requiring Committee approval.

Subsection 1(b)(3) raises from $750,000 to $2.5 million (as adjusted) the Committee approval threshold for projects involving paying for alterations to leased property.

This should give you a good idea of the average costs. However, according to Jacque in FMD, expenses for trips after September 11th (eg. Orlando) have increased significantly. So, we may want to consider increasing the deposit request. I can give you an update on trip costs as soon as the bills are processed for the trip summaries you signed today.

Let me know if you need more info.

Subject: political expenses

Hi, Jacque

As we just discussed, I am trying to find out the political expense totals for the four mixed trips that occurred in 2001 (calendar year.) I need to provide this info to Counsel by COB today. Thanks!!

Kim
